Govt forms committee

Parbatai Chattogram Jana Samhati Samiti (PCJSS).

Even after 27 years, many major sections of the accord are yet to be implemented.

Following the July uprising, demands to implement the treaty resurfaced.

According to the notification, the reconstituted committee will monitor and supervise the implementation process of the agreement, formulate and implement programmes for resolving matters such as the surrender of arms and granting of amnesty under the agreement, coordinate the activities of all relevant ministries, departments, subordinate government and semi-government bodies, autonomous organisations, and authorities related to the implementation process, and provide necessary advice and directives.

Additionally, it will address and resolve issues related to the implementation of the agreement and make recommendations to the government if necessary.

The committee will also oversee activities related to the repatriation and rehabilitation of refugees, as well as the rehabilitation of internally displaced persons.

The Ministry of Chittagong Hill

Tracts Affairs will provide secretarial support to the committee.

Furthermore, all ministries and departments are required to comply with the decisions and directives of the Implementation Committee and take necessary measures accordingly.

To ensure the smooth implementation of the agreement, the Implementation Committee may form sub-committees as needed, with the Ministry of Chittagong Hill Tracts Affairs providing necessary assistance and covering all related expenses.

The notification states that the committee will start its activities promptly.

The defence had also argued that the amendment which created the tribunal was invalid, saying the government had no power to make such amendments. Ziaul's counsels also argued that the addition of enforced disappearance as a crime under the tribunal's scope was unconstitutional and thus called for acquitting the former major general.

The prosecutor said that the challenge regarding the legitimacy of the tribunal itself was not a matter for the tribunal to decide and should have been taken up before the constitutional court. Challenging the constitutionality of a court before the same court is unheard of, he said.

Citing articles 47(3) and 47(A) of the constitution, Tajul said that "those accused of crimes against humanity, genocide, and war crimes do not have fundamental rights" and cannot file writ petitions either. He said if there were laws conflicting with these constitutional provisions, those laws would be deemed invalid as they are protected by the constitution. Therefore, the defence arguments are not tenable.

The chief prosecutor concluded that the petition was likely filed to gain media attention and create controversy around the tribunal. They suggested that the tribunal should impose exemplary punishment and fines on Ziaul's lawyers and reject this petition.

A journalist of the newspaper seeking anonymity said that since August 5, 2024, a group of journalists supporting BNP have been trying to establish control in the newspaper, and they intensified their efforts when its editor was sent to jail.

On Sunday, a group of journalists, along with union leaders and outsiders, held a demonstration in front of the newspaper's main office, he added.

In response, the owner issued the shutdown notice.

A senior journalist at Bhorer Kagoj clarified that no employee had unpaid salaries.

However, the issue arose because some journalists, hired on a consolidated basis, were demanding wages as per the 8th Wage Board since the beginning of their job, leading to the conflict, he added.

No journalists from Bhorer Kagoj wanted to make any comments on the record.

Bhorer Kagoj is considered one of the leading newspapers that established a new trend in journalism in the 1990s for its novel features, magazines, and supplements.

The major Bangla daily went to print on February 15, 1992, from Dhaka.

Nayeemul Islam Khan was the founding editor of the newspaper. He was followed by Matiur Rahman, Benazir Ahmed, Abed Khan, and currently, Shyamal Dutta, who is now behind bars.

Meanwhile, a faction of the Dhaka Union of Journalists (DUJ) expressed dismay in light of the newspaper's abrupt closure without prior notice.

Yesterday, in a statement, DUJ President Sohel Haider Chowdhury and General Secretary Akter Hossain said the sudden closure notice of the 34-year-old newspaper disheartened the working journalists and staff there.

"If the notice is enforced, many journalists will lose their jobs and struggle to sustain their livelihoods amidst rising living expenses and inflation. Such decisions can never be considered acceptable," the statement said.

Therefore, the DUJ has urged the authorities to reconsider their decision.

Task force for using AI

By merging traditional methods such as community workshops and meetings with contemporary digital campaigns utilising social media and online platforms, the CSBCC&R would create a unified and impactful communication strategy to drive social change, attitudes, norms, and practices.

Regarding AI utilisation, the draft report says a major strategic emphasis is required within key sectors such as education, health, agriculture, and public institutions to facilitate the widespread adoption of digital and artificial intelligence (AI) technologies.

For instance, employing satellite sensing technology can enable effective crop early-warning systems to improve agricultural practices, while distance education can ensure that learning continues uninterrupted regardless of geographical barriers.

"By integrating these advanced technologies, we can enhance quality, efficiency and access across multiple sectors, ultimately improving outcomes for the entire population," said the report.

Moreover, the report says utilising digital and AI technologies effectively would help bridge the existing digital divide.

This involves reducing data costs, increasing access to affordable smartphones – implemented with appropriate safeguards for age-specific content – and fostering the growth of a robust domestic software and hardware ICT industry.

"By promoting widespread digital access, we can empower citizens, enhance digital literacy, and stimulate innovation within the ICT sector," the report mentions.

The task force also recommended introducing an automatic traffic signalling system for streamlining the urban transport system.

Such a system is a fundamental requirement for any major city worldwide; yet attempts to implement the system in Dhaka have faced challenges, often collapsing due to resistance from vested interests, it said.

This initiative should be regarded as a "low-hanging fruit" because it is both actionable and capable of yielding immediate benefits.

Besides, it said the current model of public transport in Dhaka, characterised by multiple ownership of bus services, has led to significant confusion and chaos on the roads, directly impacting public safety and convenience.

A transition to a single-owner bus service franchise that unites all the fragmented owners into one provider has been recommended as a solution to end urban bus transport chaos.

This should be marked by a move to put drivers on a fixed salary rather than on a commission.

Key focus areas of the report include pilot projects to demonstrate reform potential, initiatives in infrastructure, education, health, and governance, leveraging digital technology, and fostering youth engagement.

It critiques past governance and economic mismanagement while proposing a human-centered development strategy.

The draft report has suggested for public hospital reform in Dhaka with real-time monitoring and user feedback, rural school and clinic reform tailored to address rural challenges, and revitalisation of the Buriganga river as a symbolic and urgent environmental project.

Besides, for institutional reforms, it said creation of new bodies like the Regulatory Reform Commission, and Centre for Global Excellence in STEM education.

Moreover, it recommended for strategic overhaul of Bangladesh Biman, including potential renaming as "Bangladesh Airways" as well as restructuring or replacement.

It is part of the so-called Three Brotherhood Alliance, with the Ta'ang National Liberation Army and the Arakan Army, that launched an offensive against the military junta in February 2021, seizing swathes of territory near the border with China.

The MNDAA, made up of ethnic Chinese, said last July it had taken control of a major military base near the Chinese border.

Analysts say China is worried about the advance of anti-junta forces which have pushed the military to withdraw from the base. "If the notice is enforced, many journalists will lose their jobs and struggle to sustain their livelihoods amidst rising living expenses and inflation. Such decisions can never be considered acceptable," the statement said.
