8 mega projects cost $7.5b more for graft, delay

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and AHSAN HABIB

The costs of eight mega projects soared by a staggering 68 percent, or $7.52 billion from the initial estimation, mainly due to poor and faulty feasibility studies, corruption, and delays in launch, according to the report of a government-formed task force.

The projects are the Padma Bridge, the Padma Bridge rail link, the Jamuna railway bridge, the Dhaka-Mawa expressway, the Bangabandhu Tunnel, the Dhaka Metro Rail Line-6, the Terminal-3 of Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport and the BRT Line-3.

The initially estimated costs of these projects were $11.2 billion in total.

The costs eventually rose to $18.64 billion, according to the report from the task force led by KAS Murshid, former director general of the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies.

The task force was formed on September 10 last year to develop strategies to boost the economy and mobilise resources for equitable and sustainable development.

The 12 member committee submitted its report to the interim government last week.

Besides poor and faulty feasibility studies, the reasons for the higher costs identified by the task force included delays in land acquisition, prolonged and corrupt land valuation process, misuse of acquired land and conflict with other projects.

ADB to provide up to $1b by June

Conditions include banking sector reforms, climate change mitigation actions

REJAUL KARIM BYRON

The Asian Development Bank has agreed to provide up to $1 billion in budget support by June, but the government must commit to several terms that include reducing the tenure and number of private bank directors.

On Monday, an ADB team led by its South Asia Director General Takeo Konishi met Finance Adviser Salehuddin Ahmed to discuss its funding plan for Bangladesh.

At the meeting, the ADB informed that it has some low-cost funds for policy-based programmes that could be made available by June. The Daily Star has learnt from finance ministry officials informed with the proceedings.

Contacted, Ahmed told The Daily Star that the loan will help the interim government implement its different policies.

“However, getting funds from international development partners is not easy as many conditions need to be met to get the money. We will secure the kind of loan that comes with low interest rates,” he added.

The ADB can provide up to $500 million to implement banking sector reforms, which would essentially entail rolling back many of the amendments made to the Bank Company Act between 2013 and 2023 due to pressure from bank owners linked to the Awami League.

At present, a private bank can have as many as 20 directors in its board, three members from the same family in the board and a maximum tenure of 12 years for a director.

The Manila-based multilateral lender would ask for these provisions to be pared back as part of the loan conditions.

Another $300 million to $500 million would be offered to mitigate the impacts of climate change. The ADB might put at least 16 conditions for the programme.
