DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The World Food Programme has cut the monthly food aid for the Rohingyas in Bangladesh from $12.50 to $6 per person, beginning in April, raising the risk of widespread hunger in the Rohingya camps in Cox's Bazar and Bhashan Char.

"What they are receiving now is already not enough. So, it's hard to imagine the consequences of this new cut," Mohammed Mizanur Rahman, Refugee, Relief and Repatriation Commissioner, told news agency Reuters yesterday.

Rahman received the letter confirming the $6.60 cut from April 1 yesterday after being informed verbally the previous day.

A spokesperson for the UN World Food Programme in Dhaka did not immediately return a Reuters request for comment.

The WFP decision comes amid the Trump administration's termination of USAID funding worldwide. Initially, when the decision was announced in January, it was said that emergency food aid would remain out of the purview.

The WFP, however, did not specify in its letter if the reduction was due to the decision by the Trump administration, Rahman told Reuters.

But he said it was likely as the US was the top donor to the refugee response.

The US Embassy in Dhaka did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

In the letter to the RRRRC, seen by Reuters, the WFP said it had been

Fear of hunger grips camps

MOKAMMEL SHUVO, Cox's Bazar

Rohingya refugees and locals of Cox's Bazar have expressed a deep concern over the reduction in funds for food aid.

They fear that it will lead to limited access to nutritious food, a rise in crimes in the refugee settlements and their surrounding areas, and increased tension between locals and refugees.

Currently, the World Food Programme provides $12.50 a month for food for each Rohingya refugee in Bangladesh. From April, the allocation will drop to $6.

Relief officials warn that this decision will worsen food shortage and malnutrition in the camps.

"I am speechless hearing the news," said Mohammad Zubair, chairman of the Arakan Rohingya Society for Peace and Human Rights.

"There is no way for Rohingyas to survive. Even what we get now is not enough to maintain a nutritious diet," he said, adding that hunger may cause a spike in crimes like robberies, theft, and drug trafficking in the area.

"We don't want to live here on financial assistance. We want to return to our country and grow our own food," he said, urging UN agencies to establish a safe zone in Rakhine State for the Rohingyas.

Selim Khan, a Rohingya youth from Kutupalong camp, said, "We have no earning. We live entirely on food assistance. This is devastating news," he added.

SM Suza, secretary of the Rohingya Affairs unit of Jatiya Nagorik Committee, said, "When their food rations are cut, they will leave the camps in search of livelihood, putting immense pressure on local job market."

Mob ransacks Gulshan flat late at night

Attack follows rumours of stashed cash; three held

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A mob stormed a flat in the capital's Gulshan on Tuesday night, claiming that it belongs to Tanvir Imam, the son of HT Imam, who was an adviser to the ousted prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

Alleging that a large cache of illegal weapons and cash were there, the mob ransacked the flat.

Mokhlesur Rahman, inspector (investigation) of Gulshan Police Station, told The Daily Star the flat does not belong to HT Imam or his son.

The daughter of the flat owner, one Rahman, had married Tanvir, a former lawmaker, but they got separated around 20-25 years ago.

Talebur Rahman, deputy commissioner (media) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said

Focus should also be on healing, reconciliation

Says Volker Turk about Bangladesh's future course

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh must focus not only on accountability but also healing and reconciliation, said Volker Turk, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights at a press conference in Geneva yesterday.

"I think it's a historic opportunity for the country to stop the cycle of reprisals that we have seen in the past, to bring the nation together, to engage in trust building and healing," said Turk.

He said the process of healing must involve truth telling, reconciliation, memorialisation, and reform. He called it a unique chance for every citizen of Bangladesh, irrespective of whatever group or community they belonged to.

"It's a huge chance for the country and its people to deal with its past, to overcome its past, to reach a moment of healing and truth-telling. And that includes each and everyone within the society of Bangladesh. It includes people from different religious and ethnic groups. It is one country. It is one citizenship."

Turk said that if all groups and political parties have the spirit to make this happen, "[...] the world will have a story of hope to tell in what is otherwise, frankly, a very difficult environment all over the place."

Citing the UN fact-finding report, Turk said the UN had reasonable grounds to believe that crimes against humanity were committed, directed against protesters during the July-August massacre that killed 1,400 and injured thousands.

"It is absolutely critical to overhaul and dismantle the repressive laws and institutions that were there for much too long."

He called on the international community to aid Bangladesh in its rebuilding efforts.

CR Abrar outlines visions for students

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The size of the interim government, led by Prof Muhammad Yunus, increased once again yesterday, the third such expansion since it took office.

An oath-taking ceremony was held at 11:00am at the Bangabhaban, where migration expert and former Dhaka University professor Chowdhury Rafiqul Abrar, known as CR Abrar, was sworn in as an adviser.

President Mohammed Shahabuddin administered the oath. With Prof Abrar's inclusion, the number of advisers in the government now stands at 23.

After assuming office at the education ministry, Prof Abrar outlined his vision for the education system "where students can see their futures right here, in our own country."

Millions of students still without textbooks

Govt misses deadline again

ARAFAT RAHAMAN

Despite repeated assurances, the interim government has once again failed to distribute textbooks to crores of students across the country, with the 40-day Ramadan and Eid vacation already underway.

After missing the usual January deadline, then education adviser Wahiduddin Mahmud stated that the National Curriculum and Textbook Board (NCTB) would complete the distribution of all 40.15 crore textbooks by February. However, this deadline was also missed.

With students now on their Ramadan and Eid holiday, Wahiduddin, on his final day as adviser yesterday, once again promised that the books would be delivered by March 10.

NCTB officials, however, have indicated that this deadline may also be missed due to a scarcity of paper.

Amid these repeated promises and missed deadlines, students remain the worst affected.

Crores of children began their academic year without essential textbooks, and now, as they enter their long holiday, their studies have been severely disrupted.

Secondary school students commenced their vacation on February 27, while primary school students began a day earlier. By that time, only 66 percent of secondary school textbooks -- out of 30.96 crore -- had been cleared for distribution. For primary students, over 90 percent of their 9.19 crore textbooks were ready, according to NCTB officials.

Board sources indicate that the shortages are particularly severe for students in grades five, eight, and nine. Out of 5.20 crore eighth-grade textbooks, only 2.96 crore had been printed. Similarly, as of February 25, only 2.20 crore of the 6.12 crore ninth-grade textbooks were available.

Rihad Islam, a sixth-grade student at Bhatia High School in Jhenidah's Shailakupa upazila, has received only three textbooks, including Bangla and English. He is still waiting for crucial books such as Mathematics, Science, and Bangladesh & Global Studies.

"Our teachers only conduct classes for the subjects we have books for. After that, they send us home. I've heard that students in other schools are facing the same issue," Rihad told this newspaper.

His elder sister, Jasmine Ara, expressed frustration, saying, "Teachers have given study assignments for the holidays, but how can he study when he only has two books? When I asked this, they suggested printing PDFs of the books as a temporary solution."

Perks, bonuses of MPO teachers set to increase

Says Prof Wahiduddin on his last day as education adviser

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

On his last day as education adviser yesterday, Prof Wahiduddin Mahmud said he believed private institution teachers' demand for a pay rise is fair but the issue cannot be settled with just one or two years' budgets.

"It is very difficult to make people understand this.... However, the process must begin, and [the authorities] are taking that first step," the adviser said.

He said that private institution teachers under the government's Monthly Pay Order (MPO) scheme would see increases in their allowances for festivals, entertainment, house rent, and medical, starting from this year's Eid-ul-Azha and in the next budget.

"I am not making any announcements regarding the exact amount of the increase. However, I know that the current budget will cover parts of it, and next year's budget will provide further provisions," he added.

Prof Wahiduddin said that a portion of the funds for the retirement and welfare benefits of MPO-listed private institution teachers is being established this year.

"Some of it has already been set up, and more will be allocated in the next budget. However, making the entire fund sustainable will not be possible within one

Man arrested for harassing female DU student

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police yesterday arrested a man on charges of harassing a female student of Dhaka University in Shahbagh.

The arrestee, Arnob Sardar, works as a bookbinder at the DU library.

He was handed over to Shahbagh Police Station in the evening by the university authorities after he allegedly verbally abused the woman for not having her “scarf” in the right place.

Khalid Mansur, officer in charge of Shahbagh police, confirmed the arrest to The Daily Star.

The student had earlier made a post on Facebook, detailing the incident.

She shared a photo of a man in the post and wrote, “This man harassed me today on my way from Shahbagh. He suddenly stopped me on the road and told me that my clothing was ‘inappropriate’, among other things... When I said I will call the proctor, he ran away.”

ISLAMIC UNIVERSITY Sheikh Mujibur Hall renamed Shah Azizur Hall

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Kushia

The authorities of Islamic University have changed the names of its four dormitories and an academic building that were previously named after ousted prime minister Sheikh Hasina and her family members.

The IU yesterday issued a notification, signed by the university’s assistant registrar, in this regard.

The decision was made at the 267th syndicate meeting held on February 28, according to the notification.

As per the new names, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman Hall has been renamed Shah Azizur Hall, while Sheikh Russel Hall has been renamed Shaheed Anas Hall, Bangamata Begum Fazilatunnessa Mujib Hall Ummul Muminin Ayesha Siddika Hall, and Sheikh Hasina Hall July-36 Hall.

Besides, the name of Wazed Miah Science Building has been changed to Ibn Sina Science Building.

said a former caretaker of the building Shakil Ahmed, 28, instigated the mob by spreading rumours that Tk 200-300 crore might be stashed in the flat.

Police arrested Shakil and two others in this connection. Incumbent caretaker Abdul Mannan filed a case with Gulshan Police Station.

The two other arrestees are Shakil Khandakar, 24, and his father Jewel Khandakar, 48.

The vandalism began after the intruders, identifying themselves as locals, carried out a “search” around 11:30pm on Tuesday.

They told reporters that they had information that apart from illegal firearms and cash, people involved in killing student protesters were holed up there.

As the crowd gathered in and around the building near Shahabuddin Park in Gulshan 2, journalists and YouTubers followed. Some of the intruders said they called the media to cover their search.

They chanted anti-Awami League slogans. At one stage, they broke open the door of the flat. The entire incident was broadcast live by some TV channels.

On information, police and later army personnel rushed there and intervened.

Before leaving the building, journalists talked to some of the intruders who said they did not find any illegal firearms, cash or any suspects.

One youth, who identified himself as Shakil Ahmed, told reporters, “We are locals and we entered the flat to see if any illegal firearms or money was kept there.”

When a journalist asked whether they have any permission to conduct such a search, he said, “We did it on our own.”

Shakil said they had informed the law enforcers about their suspicion, but they did not take any action.

Talking to reporters, caretaker Mannan said the flat was owned by one Rahman, who was Tanvir’s father-in-law.

The couple was divorced long ago, possibly in 2001.

Mannan said the people broke the door and entered the flat. “We tried to resist but failed. They ransacked the flat.”

Meanwhile, the chief adviser’s press wing yesterday said another group attempted to enter the house on Monday night under a similar pretext but was dispersed by police.

The home ministry has reiterated that no individual should take the law into their own hands, said a statement of the press wing.

“A conflict between locals and Rohingyas may emerge in this situation. It’s a major humanitarian crisis. The international community must step in to ensure the basic human rights of the Rohingyas,” Suza said.

League leader and Rajshahi University student Abdul Wahab Al Masud was killed on suspicion of murder, theft and other crimes.

Such incidents have been reported across the country, including Bogura, Madaripur, Tangail, Chattogram, Khulna, Mymensingh, Narayanganj, Tongi, Rajshahi, and Barishal. While some have led to murder charges or police cases, proper investigations and punishments remain elusive.

trying to raise funds to keep the rations at $12.50 per month but had failed to find donors.

A cut in rations to anything less than $6 would “fall below the minimum survival level and fail to meet basic dietary needs”, it said.

The WFP said it accepted that “given the refugees’ complete reliance on humanitarian aid”, the cut would strain families struggling to meet basic needs and heighten “increasing tensions within the camps”.

It said it had appealed to multiple donors for funding and that cost-saving measures alone were not enough.

“I have come to know that the UN is going to cut food ration for the Rohingyas – this is shocking and very unfortunate,” Khing Maung, a youth leader living in Kutupalong camp, told The Daily Star yesterday.

More than 1.1 million Rohingyas live in Cox’s Bazar and Bhashanchar.

“I appeal to the world community not to ignore us. We are already stateless and our wish to return to Myanmar is not materialising anytime soon,” he said.

A previous round of ration cuts to Rohingyas in 2023 led to a sharp increase in hunger and malnutrition, according to the UN. The food rations were brought down to $8 a month then.

Within months, they said, 90 percent of the camp population “struggled to access an adequate diet” and more than 15 percent of children suffered from malnutrition, the highest rate recorded. The cut was later reversed.

Nearly 50 percent of the total humanitarian assistance for Rohingyas comes from the US government, Jashim Uddin, an NGO official working for a humanitarian project in Cox’s Bazar, told this correspondent yesterday.

“Cutting this fund means a disaster for the Rohingya people,” he said, adding that this will also impact the host communities in Cox’s Bazar.

The Rohingya food items include rice, lentils, pangas fish and poultry, which is the bare minimum, he said.

“Earlier, there were more non-food items provided to the Rohingyas, but recently those items like soap were also reduced. Rohingyas used to sell some of the non-food items for food. With food aid cut, the nutrition level of the Rohingyas will drastically worsen,” Jashim Uddin said.

With no job opportunities, many of the Rohingya youths go out of the camps for work, with some getting involved in drug and human trafficking, he said.

“I am afraid that with limited food aid, the Rohingyas would attempt to break out of the camps and snatch the locals’ jobs,” he said.

The Bangladesh authorities should take up the issue with the international community immediately, said an official of the RRRC office.

Millions of students still without textbooks

Jahid Hasan, an eighth-grader at Gaibandha Government Boys’ High School, has received only four out of 14 textbooks.

“Teachers are assigning chapters from books we haven’t even received yet. How are we supposed to study?” he asked.

A teacher at Bhatat High School in Jhenidah, speaking on condition of anonymity, admitted, “We’re trying to follow the academic calendar, but without books, we’re struggling. If we don’t assign tasks, it will lead to significant learning gaps. That’s why we printed PDF copies of some of the more important books and distributed them to certain classes.”

Sharmin Sultana, the mother of a ninth-grade student at Rajdhani

High School in the capital, said, “The delay in January due to national issues was understandable, but February has ended, and some books are still missing. Now, with Ramadan, Eid, and SSC exam holidays, half the academic year will be lost. How will students catch up?”

The situation has also forced many parents to bear additional costs.

Liton Karmaker, the father of a ninth-grade student at Dinajpur Zilla School, said, “My son’s teachers told him to print out PDFs and complete assignments. I may be able to afford it, but many parents can’t. Some don’t even know where to find these PDFs. This is an extra burden on parents, caused by the government’s failure.”

NCTB member (Textbook) Riad Chowdhury claimed that, as of Monday, around 84 percent of all textbooks were ready for distribution.

He stated that approximately 98.25 percent of primary-level books and 80 percent of secondary-level books were completed and ready for delivery. “The remaining books will be ready soon and will be delivered in the coming weeks.”

When contacted, NCTB Chairman Prof Reazul Hassan said, “It’s true that we aim to print all the books by March 10. However, we need help from the printing industry owners. As far as we know, there is a scarcity of paper, which has contributed to the delay.”

He acknowledged the learning gap that may result from the delay but claimed it would not exceed a month. “If we can cut short some holidays and if teachers take more responsibility in their classes, we can catch up.”

Focus should also be on healing

“I had a chance to meet a number of the victims. I went to one of the hospitals in Bangladesh, and I could see and witness myself how many people, and particularly young people and children, have been affected by what happened. They were still in treatment when I was there in November, and some of them have life-altering injuries.”

“We need resources for victim-centered reparations programmes, for compensation, long-term medical treatment, rehabilitation, care and livelihood opportunities for victims. We also need member states to support us in this effort.

“We need truth-telling about the fate of the disappeared people, because that brings closure for the families and the loved ones. It is a part of this victim-centered approach.”

He said the recommendations provided in the UN report were crucial for ensuring the country’s future stability, protecting human rights and strengthening democracy. He also said his office was in the process of finalising a physical presence in Bangladesh to provide support and technical cooperation on all the areas of reform.

Law Adviser Asif Nazrul said, “The collective resolve of the people of Bangladesh for a just, inclusive and functioning democracy with the promotion and protection of human rights at its core, should define Bangladesh of the future and place our nation as a responsive and responsible state in the global community.”

Mir Snigdho, the brother of Mir Mugdho who was shot and killed during the protests, said, “The international community must do more than just issue statements. International bodies must enforce accountability, and civil society must push for lasting change from this tragedy. Decisive action is needed, supporting independent investigations, enforcing consequences for non-compliance, and ensuring justice mechanisms.

“Justice is not a single act but a process, one that demands prosecution, truth-seeking, reparations and institutional reforms for victims. Justice means accountability, not just for those who pull the trigger, but also for those who gave the orders,” he said, adding that despite progress, gaps remain.

“Many victims still wait for their voices to be heard, while others have lost faith in a system that has failed them repeatedly. These gaps mean continued trauma, social divisions and be more or less than the prescribed penalty for the crime

Additionally, section 59 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that a criminal be handed over to the police upon arrest. Various punishments, including life imprisonment, are specified in sections 187, 319, 323, 335, and 304 of the Penal Code. In cases of mob beatings leading to death, all participants are equally responsible under section 34 of the Penal Code.

International law also condemns mob beatings and killings as a human rights violation.

The HRSS called upon the police and other law enforcement agencies to play an effective role in preventing such incident. It also urged the interim government to play a responsible role in ensuring the safety of life and property of all citizens and to bring the culprits to justice.

The rights body urged all citizens to respect the rule of law and not to take the law into their own hands.

Earlier, Ravindra and Williamson set the foundations for a big total on a batting-friendly Gaddafi Stadium pitch after New Zealand won the toss and batted first.

Daryl Mitchell clubbed 49 off 37 balls and Phillips smashed a 27-ball 49 not out as the Black Caps plundered 110 runs in the last 10 overs and 66 in the last five.

South Africa’s bowling line-up struggled right from the start as Ravindra and Will Young (21) put on 48 for the opening stand.

It was followed by a magnificent 164-run partnership for the second wicket between Ravindra and Williamson that put the New Zealanders on track for a massive total, as the duo scored at will with or two budgets. Hopefully, it will be resolved within three to four budget cycles in the future,” he said.

He also recommended a forward-thinking commission to address the longstanding issues plaguing the education sector.

Speaking at the Secretariat, he questioned the effectiveness of past education commissions. The formation of five to six education commissions failed to solve the problems, he said.

“Can we solve problems just by forming a commission with a few people? It takes time to understand the issues at hand. We need a commission that thinks ahead,” he said.

Prof Wahiduddin also stressed the need for trained teachers to implement reformed curriculum effectively. “Without proper training, the reforms will be ineffective. It takes time for an education system to deteriorate, and right now, our education system is chaotic and disorganised,” he said, reports UNB.

Regarding delays in textbook distribution, he said all students would receive their textbooks by March 10. “While the new books were supposed to be delivered by February, many students are still waiting. However, the issue will be resolved by the new deadline,” he said.

Addressing concerns over recent unrests in public and private educational institutions, he said while the situation had not fully returned to normal, it had improved to some extent.

Prof Wahiduddin was appointed as an adviser on August 16 last year. He was given the charge of both the education ministry and the planning ministry.

Newly appointed Education Adviser Prof CR Abrar took oath of office yesterday.

Earlier, Chief Adviser’s Press Secretary Shafiqul Alam said Prof Wahiduddin had expressed concerns about handling two ministries simultaneously. Given Prof Wahiduddin’s responsibilities at the planning ministry and his advanced age, CR Abrar was appointed to the advisory council.

Two persons were arrested yesterday over the attack and robbing of two Iranian nationals during a "mob attack" in Bashundhara Residential Area on Tuesday.

The arrestees are Abdullah, 20, and Sabbir Mia, 19, said Bhatara Police Station Sub-inspector Habibur Rahman.

Earlier, Sub-inspector Chhoton Chandra Das filed a case with the police station in this regard.

According to police, the two Iranian nationals were injured and allegedly robbed of cash and mobile phones during the attack.

They had arrived in Bangladesh two days prior and planned to stay for a month. The incident took place near Bashundhara's main gate around 1:45pm that day when they got into an argument with local currency exchange brokers over the exchange rate, which they had arranged over the phone.

They were taken to Kurmitola General Hospital for treatment and later escorted back to their hotel.

AL's ouster revives hope, but justice still elusive

SAURAV HOSSAIN SIAM

Exactly 12 years have passed since the killing of Tanwir Muhammad Taqi in Narayanganj, yet justice remains elusive, as the investigating body, Rab, has yet to submit the charge sheet to the court.

After waiting over a decade for justice, Taqi's grieving parents found a glimmer of hope following the arrest of six individuals after the Awami League government was ousted in August last year.

But now, seven months later, that hope is beginning to fade, as little progress has been made since the formation of the interim government.

However, the victim's family, relatives, and well-wishers refuse to give up, continuing their movement on the streets to demand justice.

As part of their efforts, Narayanganj Sangskritik Jote has "Six people have been arrested recently following the formation of the interim government. One of them has given a confessional statement. The case is progressing, and we hope it will be completed soon," said Taqi's father, Rafiur Rabbi.

"Within a year of the killing, Rab had uncovered details of the murder. But when Sheikh Hasina declared her support for the Osman family, all progress in the case came to a halt," he said. "We demand a fair and just charge sheet be submitted to the court. We are still waiting for justice," Rabbi said.

The court has extended the investigation deadline 81 times so far, as Rab repeatedly sought more time to complete the probe.

Don't let river grabbers contest polls

HRPB urges EC to amend RPO

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Rights organisation Human Rights and Peace for Bangladesh (HRPB) yesterday submitted a memorandum to the Election Commission requesting it to amend the Representation of the People Order (RPO), incorporating a provision to disqualify the river polluters and encroachers from elections.

A delegation of HRPB led by its president Advocate Manzill Murshid placed the memorandum to the EC at its office.

Earlier, the High Court in 2016 ordered a provision in this regard.

The Supreme Court also suggested that the grabbers and polluters should be disqualified from contesting the elections.

Despite the suggestions, no law has been formulated in this regard, said HRPB.

Reform labour law maintaining global standard

CA asks ministry

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Chief Adviser Professor Yunus yesterday asked the officials concerned to reform the labour law to meet international standards for improving the living conditions of millions of labourers employed in different sectors.

The chief adviser issued the directive during a meeting with the officials of the Labour and Employment Ministry ahead of the 353rd session of the International Labour Organisation to be held in Geneva between March 10 and 20.

Labour and Employment Ministry adviser M Sakhawat Hossain will lead the Bangladesh delegation in the ILO session.

"We have to do everything positive and get things done. We are not here to make an excuse," said Yunus. He also asked the officials to ensure insurance coverage and healthcare benefits for workers.

Labour and Employment Ministry Adviser M Sakhawat Hossain, secretary AHM Shafiquzzaman, Law and Justice Division Secretary Sheikh Abu Taher, and ILO Country Representative Tuomo Poutiainen were present at the meeting.

50 illegal depots knocked down

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka North City Corporation yesterday dismantled more than 50 illegal warehouses for bricks, sand, and stone, along with other unauthorised structures in Gabtali Beribadh area.

DNCC Administrator Mohammad Azaz during the drive said the DNCC owns approximately 150 acres of land along both sides of the Gabtoli Beribadh road, much of which has been unlawfully occupied for years. The eviction drive will continue in phases, he added.

A DAY IN COURT

A smiling Shajahan and a worried Salim

As former shipping minister Shajahan Khan was escorted into the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court of Dhaka yesterday, he maintained a smile.

Shajahan, a presidium member of the Awami League, entered the dock under tight police security, accompanied by other party leaders, including former law minister Anisul Huq, former DNCC mayor Atiqul Islam, former state minister for Liberation War affairs AB Tajul Islam, former lawmaker Mohammad Solaiman Salim, and former Supreme Court judge AHM Shamsuddin Chowdhury Manik.

Minutes later, journalist couple Shakil Ahmed and Farzana Rupa were brought into the same dock, followed by former state minister for industries Kamal Ahmed Majumder.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Monirul Islam formally showed the AL leaders and journalists arrested in connection with various cases filed with different police stations regarding the July uprising.

SHAJAHAN AND HIS REMARKS

As the accused were led back to the lockup, a journalist asked Shajahan how he was faring.

"Doing alright with your prayers. Pray for me," he replied.

When asked what prayers they should offer, he said, "Pray that I am released soon so I can work towards restoring peace and order and participate in the upcoming election."

A journalist remarked, "Everyone is saying you have ruined the country."

Shajahan countered, "It will soon be proven whether we ruined the country or someone else did."

When another journalist inquired about his frequent smiles, we face any obstacles in ensuring justice. They expressed interest in learning more about the enforced disappearances and extrajudicial killings that occurred over the last 15 years under Sheikh Hasina's rule," he said.

He said the two diplomats emphasised their neutral stance and urged the government to ensure punishment to prevent such crimes in the future.

Meanwhile, the ICT yesterday extended the deadline by three months for submitting the probe report on the killing of college student Muhammad Hridoy during the uprising in Gazipur's Konabari.

The tribunal also approved a one-day interrogation of Constable Akram Hossain, who directly shot Hridoy, an eleventh grader at Hemnagar Degree College in Tangail. On August 5, Akram allegedly shot Hridoy at point-blank range after police encircled him.

WATER CRISIS IN CHATTOGRAM

Residents struggle amid salinity surge

SIFAYET ULLAH, City

Residents in various areas of the port city of Chattogram are grappling with an acute water crisis as supplies from the Chattogram Water and Sewerage Authority (CWasa) have significantly diminished.

CWasa is compelled to shut down its treatment plants daily for extended periods due to saltwater intrusion in the Halda river and reduced water release from Kaptai Lake.

As of November last year, the state agency had a total of 98,755 registered consumers.

"We are only getting water once or twice a week. Due to the shortage, we are forced to buy bottled water from the local market," said Abdullah Al Noman, a resident of the Akbar Shah area.

Tofayel Ahmed, a resident of the Bahaddarhat area, said, "With our limited income, we are compelled to buy bottled water for consumption. This is putting extra financial strain on us."

CWasa operates four surface water treatment plants – two in Rangunia on the bank of the Karnaphuli River and two in Madunaghat and Mohora areas along the Halda River – with a combined production capacity of around 46 crore litres of water daily. However, the ongoing crisis has seen daily production reduced to around 40-41 crore litres.

According to CWasa's data, salinity levels in the Halda have spiked significantly above the usual range of 100-250 mg per litre near the Mohora plant.

The salinity levels recorded most recently were 2,300 mg per litre on March 2, followed by 2,280 mg per litre on March 3, and 1,520 mg per litre on March 4.

Higher salinity levels were also noted at the Madunaghat plant area – 1,700 mg per litre on March 2, followed by 1,500 mg per litre on March 3, and 1,020 mg per litre on March 4.

"Halda's increasing salinity has forced the closure of the two plants for two to three hours daily, leading to reduced water production by at least 3-4 crore litres," said Maksud Alam, chief engineer of CWasa.

"Meanwhile, the water release from Kaptai Lake into the Karnaphuli has reduced significantly as the lake's water level has dropped following prolonged periods of low rainfall. Consequently, the water level of the Karnaphuli River has also fallen, reducing water production at the two plants in Rangunia by around 2 crore litres daily," he added.

The Consumers Association of Bangladesh has expressed concern over the high salinity levels in CWasa's water in a statement yesterday.

"Due to the negligence of certain CWasa officials, city residents are being forced to endure water shortages and are even having to drink salty water, especially during the Ramadan," the statement read.

The CWasa chief engineer said, "We maintain salinity levels in the water at a maximum of 250 mg per litre. While some salinity may remain after the purification process, it does not exceed the 250 mg per litre limit."

A smiling Shajahan and a worried Salim

Shajahan responded, "I always smile. I will keep smiling until my last breath."

'A RUSHED JUDGEMENT IS NO JUDGEMENT'

While in the dock, Solaiman Salim was approached by a lawyer who inquired about his prison experience.

"I am fasting, reading books, and can talk to my family over the phone. Sehri and Iftar meals are normal," he replied.

He paused and added, "Don't you see how drained everyone's faces look?"

When the judge entered,

Solaiman continued addressing journalists.

"Many journalists publish false news. They wrote that Shajahan Khan and others are getting good food in prison. These lies are making our situation worse," he stated.

Police instructed him to stop speaking, to which he retorted, "You are going to slaughter me anyway. Give me a little time."

He then told the lawyer, "A death sentence could come at any moment. I wouldn't be surprised. Look at how Bangabandhu's house was demolished. The message is clear."

After the hearing, while being taken to the lockup, he asked a lawyer about his father's health.

When a journalist asked about his comment on a possible death sentence, he replied, "A rushed judgement is no judgement."

'ONE MURDER CASE IS ENOUGH'

Inside the dock, former head of news at Ekattor Television Shakil Ahmed and principal correspondent Farzana Rupa exchanged words.

During the hearing, Rupa sought permission to speak.

"I do not have a lawyer. May I speak in favour of my bail?" she asked.

The judge replied, "This is a hearing to show you as arrested, not a bail hearing."

She continued, "The number of cases is piling up. I am a journalist. A single murder case is enough to frame me."

Meanwhile, former Supreme Court justice Manik was placed on a two-day remand in connection with the death of 24-year-old Abujor Sheikh in Dhaka's Gulshan area on July 19 last year.

TRISHAL UPAZILA

Sutia river turns into waste dump

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Indiscriminate dumping of garbage along the banks of the Sutia river in Mymensingh's Trishal upazila has continued unchecked for years due to the municipality's lack of a proper waste management system.

Since its establishment in 1998, Trishal municipality has failed to secure dedicated land for waste disposal, leaving residents to endure worsening environmental pollution. Astonishingly, there is not a single waste bin across the municipality.

Once a vital source of water for agriculture, fisheries, and the local ecosystem, the Sutia river is now choking under piles of waste.

During a recent visit, this correspondent found heaps of garbage scattered across a vast stretch of the riverbank along the Dhaka-Mymensingh highway.

Local resident Khorshid Ali said during the monsoon, these waste piles leach into the river, contaminating the water and accelerating siltation.

Other rivers in the upazila, including the Khiru, Banar, and Pagalia, are facing a similar crisis. As tributaries of the Old Brahmaputra river, their pollution is having a cascading effect on the region's entire river system.

What looks like a waste dumping zone is actually the bank of Sutia river in Mymensingh's Trishal upazila. Once a vital source of water for agriculture, fisheries, and the local ecosystem, the river is now choking under piles of waste.

Locals said they have repeatedly urged municipal authorities to take action and designate a proper waste dumping site, but their pleas have largely been ignored.

According to municipal sources, around 10 tonnes of garbage is generated daily in Trishal, with almost all of it ending up on the riverbank.

"We have not been able to secure government land for a dumping station. The municipality does not have the financial resources to purchase land on its own," said Nowshin Ahmed, executive officer of Trishal municipality.

Contacted, Abdulla Al Bari, upazila nirbahi officer of Trishal, said efforts are being made to mitigate river pollution.

"Bamboo fences have been set up around the dumping site to prevent garbage from contaminating the water," he said.

"We are actively trying to secure funds to acquire land for a dedicated waste disposal station and address this longstanding issue," he added.

Toddler dies after crawling onto railway tracks

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Gazipur

A 14-month-old child died after being hit by a train as he crawled onto the railway tracks on the Dhaka-Mymensingh route in Gazipur's Sreepur upazila yesterday.

The deceased is Abdullah, son of Al-Amin, from Gararan village in the upazila.

Sreepur Railway Station Master Saidur Rahman said the child, whose house was next to the railway tracks, crawled onto the tracks without the family's knowledge.

Later, the child was struck by a Dhaka-bound commuter train.

Bijon Malakar, resident medical officer of Sreepur Upazila Health Complex, said, "A child was brought to the hospital dead. He had injury marks on his head. The child's body has been handed over to the family."

The railway police are looking into the incident.

Woman dead, 13 houses gutted in fire

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

A woman was burned alive, and 13 houses gutted in a fire in Pabna's Ishwardi upazila yesterday.

The deceased was identified as Azila Begum, wife of Jiarul Islam of Asma village, said Md Aminul Islam, inspector of Ishwardi Fire Service and Civil Defence Station.

The fire originated from an electric short circuit at a house around 11:50am, he added. Seven firefighting units from Pabna, Ishwardi, and Lalpur areas rushed to the spot and brought the blaze under control in an hour.

Due to the densely packed nature of the residences, the fire spread quickly, he said.

Aminul said they are investigating the incident and estimating the loss caused by the fire.

Sabila Nur ventures into writing, co-authors debut book

Popular actress Sabila Nur has officially stepped into the world of writing, albeit she previously wrote stories for television dramas.

She debuted as an author at the Amar Ekushey Book Fair with the book Bhalobasha Otopor, a collection of 10 short stories co-written with Salam Russell.

Surprising fans Sabila announced her book belatedly on February 26 via her Facebook account, just before the fair ended.

She recently explained her decision to local media, stating, "Acting is my priority. I simply write occasionally, so I don't consider myself a professional writer. That's why I chose to keep it all low-key. Despite the late reveal, Bhalobasha Otopor remains available online."

Previously, her scripts inspired the dramas Parapar (2021) and Ridika (2022), in which she also starred.

Everything we do in life is our ‘Amalnama’: ZAHID HASAN

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Zahid Hasan is making his highly anticipated return to the screen with Amalnama, a web-film directed by Raihan Rafi. The film's teaser, recently released by Chorki, features the veteran actor in a bold new role as a police officer.

Excited about the project, the Made in Bangladesh actor shared with The Daily Star, "I am returning with a web-film after a considerable break, and it feels great. I chose this project because I connected with the story and my character. The project represents how I envisioned making my comeback."

Amalnama, inspired by a true story, has already generated buzz on social media. Zahid's decision to join the film was largely influenced by his admiration for both the script and the director's vision. He explained, "Raihan Rafi approached me with the story. I liked the plot and my character, so I agreed to be part of it."

As a seasoned actor, Zahid prioritises meaningful roles over quantity. "I'm an actor because I love the job. I've come this far thanks to my passion for acting. Now, let's see how the audience responds to Amalnama. I'll be happy if they enjoy it," he said.

Alongside Amalnama, Zahid will also appear in Utshob, a film directed by Tanim Noor, set for release this Eid-ul-Azha. Reflecting on his choices, he added, "I don't take on projects unless I truly like them. After my break, I've worked on two projects and enjoyed both. The audience will see me in different roles in these films."

Zahid also offered an insightful perspective on the theme of Amalnama, "Everything we do in life becomes part of our 'Amalnama,' and that's what the film highlights."

He notably praised Raihan Rafi's growth and success, saying, "Raihan is like a younger brother to us. He keeps delivering great projects, and it's exciting to see his success. His work is well-loved by the audience, and he's even receiving offers from across the border."

With Amalnama set to premiere soon, fans are eagerly awaiting Zahid Hasan's return. His comeback, combined with Raihan Rafi's storytelling, promises an exciting web-film experience.

David Warner to make Tollywood debut with ‘Robinhood’

Australian cricketer David Warner has long admired Indian cinema, especially Allu Arjun. During the pandemic, he often recreated Arjun's dialogues and dances with his family. Though many expected a collaboration, Warner's Telugu cinema debut will take a different path.

At a Hyderabad event on March 3, producer Ravi Shankar officially announced that Warner would make his Telugu film debut. However, rather than joining an Allu Arjun project, he will be featured in Venky Kudumula's directorial Robinhood, featuring Nithiin and Sreeleela.

Hints of Warner's cinematic venture had surfaced months earlier when Australian media leaked behind-the-scenes snapshots from an Indian film shoot in September last year.

This cinematic milestone comes after his partnership with acclaimed director SS Rajamouli on a commercial project earlier in April last year.

University of Cambridge screens Mro-language film ‘Dear Mother’

A Mro-language film titled Kio Ri Pekra Uo, known in English as Dear Mother, is being showcased at the University of Cambridge. According to a press release from the film's creators, the film was screened yesterday at 8:30pm (Bangladesh time), organised by the Indigenous Studies Group at Cambridge.

Directed by SK Shuvo Shadique, the 67-minute-long film, released in 2023, has been screened at top universities in Bangladesh, as well as the University of British Columbia and the University of Edinburgh. The International Centre for Social Science in Amsterdam has preserved the film researchers and cinephiles.

Hasina, clan to be tried in person

physically present in Bangladesh or in absentia, in India.

Prof Yunus recently visited one of the now "infamous secret jails", code-named the "House of Mirrors".

"This is just the ugliest thing that you can see, you can feel, or you can observe."

Prof Yunus said the number and range of people involved in the alleged crimes was "taking time" to work through. "Everybody was involved in it all."

"The whole government was involved in it. So, you cannot distinguish who was really and enthusiastically doing it, who was doing it under orders and who was not quite supportive but carrying out those kinds of things."

Hasina, the military and police are also accused of a violent crackdown on protesters in July and August which the UN estimates killed as many as 1,400 people in the days before the former prime minister fled.

Prof Yunus tried to manage expectations around how quickly the families of victims will see justice, and whether that will happen under his watch.

Elections for a new government in the country could happen as early as December.

"Some will get punished, some will still be under the process, some will still be untraceable," the chief adviser said.

ANTI-GRAFT PROBES

Prof Yunus has had a large in-tray to deal with since taking over a country in turmoil, including anti-corruption probes into those connected to Hasina.

British Labour MP Tulip Siddiq, who is Hasina's niece, is one of those being investigated by the country's Anti-Corruption Commission.

Prof Yunus said the case against her was "serious", that she had a large amount of "wealth left behind" in the country and "everything" would be looked at.

Tulip resigned as anti-corruption minister in January after being named in the investigation in Bangladesh.

A spokesperson for the London MP said she "totally denies the claims" and had "not been contacted on these matters".

REFUGEE CRISIS

The influx of Rohingya refugees into Bangladesh is another challenge for the Yunus-led interim government.

There's been a sharp rise in the number of the mainly Muslim minority fleeing Myanmar into Bangladesh amid violence escalating in the country's long-running civil war.

Prof Yunus said they were now in talks with "rebel groups" in Myanmar about the possibility of a "safe zone" to eventually help the Rohingya refugees to return to their homeland.

He also acknowledged big problems in Bangladesh's Cox's Bazar, home to the largest refugee camp in the world, where an estimated one million Rohingya refugees have fled to – and where "violence, drugs and paramilitary activities" are rife.

The tension, Yunus said, "will not disappear".

group of students against another in the name of ensuring disciplinary actions? Is this the kind of repressive and authoritarian academic environment we envisioned for post-uprising Bangladesh?"

Private university students made undeniable contributions to the mass uprising, but their roles were not recognised even by the new student organisation.

"Naturally, this exclusion led to frustration. But instead of addressing their grievances, they were assaulted and subjected to sexual harassment [on Dhaka University campus]."

Besides, the teachers expressed deep anger at the incidents of "mob injustice".

"To make matters worse, the home affairs adviser himself justified the attackers' actions by invoking religion and misinterpreting the law, effectively shifting the blame onto the victims in an utterly condemnable stance. We strongly denounce this act of power abuse and intimidation."

The statement put forth several demands, including the immediate withdrawal of the expulsion of nine CU students, resignation of the proctor, and formation of an independent and impartial investigation committee with representation from the University Grants Commission and female student representatives.

Other demands include a proper investigation by Dhaka University's Anti Sexual Harassment Cell into the assault and sexual harassment of female private university students by members of the new student organisation at Dhaka University.

The statement also called for the immediate identification and prosecution of those responsible for the mob attack on two female students in Lalmatia, as well as an unconditional retraction of the home affairs adviser's misogynistic statement.

once in New York and again in Egypt – as part of the efforts to thaw the frozen relationship between the two countries.

Now, the two countries are also planning to resume formal bilateral meetings: foreign secretary-level consultations, which were last held in 2010, and the joint economic commission, which was held for the last time in 2005.

The issues were discussed when Imran Ahmed Siddiqui, additional secretary (Asia Pacific) at Pakistan's foreign ministry, called on Md Jashim Uddin, Bangladesh's foreign secretary, at the ministry of foreign affairs yesterday.

"Both sides discussed the importance of holding the meetings," said a foreign ministry statement.

The two sides discussed the various aspects of bilateral relations as part of the preparation for the Pakistani foreign minister's visit. They discussed exploring avenues for cultural cooperation, including music, cinema, drama, youth exchanges and people-to-people contacts.

Siddiqui also handed Jashim Uddin a letter from Dar addressing Foreign Adviser Touhid Hossain.

Jashim Uddin and Siddiqui expressed satisfaction over the recent visits of several trade delegations from Pakistan to Bangladesh, emphasising the importance of visits by the product-specific trade delegations from Bangladesh to Pakistan.

Cooperation in the sectors of tourism, people-to-people contact, cultural exchanges, the issue of forcibly displaced Rohingyas and international forums were also discussed.

They also highlighted the importance of strengthened regional and multilateral cooperation through SAARC, OIC and D-8 during the meeting, which was also attended by Pakistan High Commissioner to Bangladesh Syed Ahmed Maroof.

Bangladeshi visas for Pakistani nationals have been eased, while the two countries are planning to resume direct shipping and flights.

In a separate statement, the Pakistan High Commission in Dhaka said both sides reviewed the current state of Pakistan-Bangladesh relations, which are based on "mutual respect and shared values".

They expressed satisfaction over the "positive trajectory of ties" and agreed to remain engaged in further enhancing cooperation.

Siddiqui also held meetings with Commerce Secretary Mahbubur Rahman, Cultural Affairs Secretary Ataur Rahman and Home Secretary Nasimul Ghani.

Man arrested

Speaking to this newspaper, DU Proctor Saifuddin Ahmed said, "Around 4:30pm, we received a complaint that one of our students was harassed by our library's assistant bookbinder, Arnob Sardar. Later, some students brought him to my office. When we questioned him, he admitted to the harassment. We then handed him over to the police."

"He is now at the station [early today]. A case has been filed against him, and the librarian has been asked to take official action against him."

SI Ekramul Haque, duty-officer at Shahbagh Police Station, around 1:00am told The Daily Star that a group of seven or eight people showed up at the station to question why Arnob was in police custody and why he was being punished.

The arrestee will be produced before a court tomorrow, he added.

gate around 2:15pm. They rescued BSEC Chairman Rashid and other commissioners and escorted them to Rashid's room around 2:30pm.

Some BSEC officials attempted to escape upon seeing the army personnel, who charged truncheons on the protesters. At that time, BSEC officials were chanting slogans demanding Rashid's resignation.

Saifur had been made an Officer on Special Duty (OSD), seen as a punishment, in September 2024 due to alleged corruption.

Chairman Rashid said the commission ordered Saifur's forced retirement following rules and regulations, as significant violations had been allegedly found against him in several investigations.

He said the BSEC requested the protesters to submit a list of their demands for a review by the commission. "However, they insisted on immediate acceptance of their demands," he said.

In a written statement, the BSEC chairman said the regulator is investigating multiple instances of corruption in the stock market that took place over the last 15 years and has found that several BSEC officials were involved. Therefore, the BSEC is taking action against them.

Due to these measures against corruption, some officials confined the BSEC chairman and commissioners and engaged in misconduct, the statement added.

Farzana Lalarukh, a commissioner of the BSEC, said, "Despite repeated requests, the protesters did not restore electricity supply. They created a frightful situation by threatening us and throwing things."

Before all officials were dispersed, Md Mahbubul Alam, an executive director of the BSEC, said the commission did not provide a clear response to the officials' demands when those were raised before the commission.

"Now, they are demanding the resignation of the chairman and commissioners. If they do not resign, all BSEC officials will go on work abstention from tomorrow [Thursday]."

Bring the true perpetrators to book

Justice must be ensured for the victims of enforced disappearances

At a press briefing on Tuesday, the chairperson of the inquiry commission on enforced disappearances once again stated how the highest level of the ousted Awami League government had been directly involved in cases of enforced disappearances, abusing the state's security apparatus to this heinous end. While this has been known for some time now, Tuesday's revelation reinforced the extent to which the fallen regime perverted the purpose of security forces to commit this absolute aberration of justice, rule of law, and human rights. Not only is it deeply saddening, but it is also a dark, shameful stain on the country's image as well as collective psyche.

The commission, which has been investigating cases of enforced disappearances since its formation on August 27, 2024, said it had interviewed 45 members of law enforcement and intelligence agencies, and identified those within these forces who had carried out the orders of their political masters. The commission chief also mentioned the prevailing apprehension among security forces in this regard and warned against what he called "community shielding" of the perpetrators, clarifying that individuals directly involved in this abominable crime must take personal responsibility for their actions.

We could not agree more. As we learnt from the inquiry commission's preliminary report, submitted to the chief adviser in December, various security agencies—from different wings of the police to intelligence bodies—were involved in a well-coordinated system set up by the fallen regime to abduct, detain, disappear, torture, and execute or frame in trumped up charges those critical of the government. Members of these forces thus strayed from their true purpose—serving the people and upholding the rule of law—at the behest of the deposed prime minister and her cohorts. Therefore, justice must be served, and as the commission chief said, those involved must be held accountable.

We appreciate the inquiry commission's efforts to bring justice to the victims of enforced disappearances. We also believe all details of this clandestine system of suppression should be made public. Doing so would serve as a lesson for the nation, ensuring that such a horrific abuse of our law enforcement and security forces, which are meant to protect us, is never repeated. To this end, laws could be enacted if necessary to shield security agencies from the undue influence of any government. This we suggest with the best interests of these institutions and the nation at heart.

Streamlining citizen services is crucial

More scrutiny of the draft ordinance is needed before a final decision

It is encouraging to learn about the government's plan to streamline vital certification services by bringing national identity (NID) cards and other essential records under a single authority. Reportedly, the Cabinet Division has prepared a draft ordinance to establish a dedicated body overseeing the preparation of NID cards, birth and death registrations, marriage, divorce, and adoption records, etc. The draft also proposes implementing a robust unique ID system, integrating it with various service delivery processes. However, while having a centralised authority for managing citizens' data is logical—as it could reduce public hassles and enhance service efficiency—there are also significant challenges associated with it.

At present, different government bodies oversee various civil registration processes. While NID-related services are provided by the Election Commission (EC), the Directorate of Registration under the Law and Justice Division handles marriage and divorce data, and the Directorate General of Health Services collects health data, including causes of death. NID services include issuing secure national identity cards, maintaining a national citizen registration database, and providing identity verification services to qualified public and private entities.

However, as proposed in the draft ordinance, a new entity—named the Civil Registration Commission—would be the central authority overseeing all these data related activities, including NID services. It remains unclear how the entire process will function, and experts have differing opinions on the matter. For instance, the chief election commissioner believes that NID services should remain under the Election Commission, especially as the country prepares for a national election. On the other hand, the registrar general (Birth and Death Registration) argues that integrating NID and birth registration under one authority will expedite citizen services. Given these differing perspectives, we think thorough discussions among all stakeholders are necessary before a decision is made. The government may also consider delegating NID services to the proposed Civil Registration Commission while allowing the EC to retain authority over voter list-related functions, as some have suggested.

If a central agency is indeed tasked with managing all citizens' data and certifications, it must be able to ensure strict data security measures as well as uninterrupted services. We know how the previous government's failure to protect citizens' data led to numerous scams and security breaches—something that must not happen again. The primary goal of a central data authority should be to provide citizens with secure, efficient, and hassle-free services.

India's influence and the quest for a democratic South Asia

Anu Muhammad

ANU MUHAMMAD

During British rule, present day India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh were part of the same colonial structure: British India. Therefore, we have a shared history of resistance against British imperialism, where the people of the subcontinent fought together, bound by common aspirations and cultural connections. However, to counteract this unified struggle, the colonial rulers and their local allies, including the emerging capitalist class and ideological forces, contributed to creating communal divisions. This led to the rise of Hindutva politics and, as a reaction, Muslim-centric political movements, strengthening identity politics. As a result, those who were earlier involved in the anti-British movement later became adversaries based on religious identity. When the British eventually left, the region was left in turmoil, where Hindus and Muslims saw each other as enemies while the British remained the common "friend" of all.

During British rule, investments were made in various sectors, leading to the emergence of a capitalist class that later became the driving force behind the region's development path. After independence, under Jawaharlal Nehru's leadership, India adopted policies that facilitated the merged, reinforcing each other. This connection became especially evident in the 1990s.

While India has witnessed the expansion of large capital, what has been the condition of its people? India is home to some of the world's richest people, but it is also home to the largest number of poor people, where growth of a state-sponsored capitalist class. Because of sustained political stability, this capitalist expansion continued uninterrupted, leading to the rise of powerful business groups and a strong industrial foundation in India. However, by the late 1980s, Congress began to weaken, allowing Hindutva politics and the BJP to gain significant traction. Over the past two decades, we have witnessed how large capital and Hindutva politics have caste- and class-based discrimination is rampant, despite the country's consistent economic growth.

Meanwhile, to sustain its expanding capital, India needs more markets and raw materials. Thus it is easier to understand why India seeks to assert its influence beyond its borders. Alongside economic expansion, the country has also aspired to become a global military power. In the 1990s, India became a nuclear-armed state, conducting nuclear tests that prompted Pakistan to do the same. India has one of the largest military forces globally and is the largest importer of arms.

Within India's own borders, there has been a heavy militarisation process, closely linked to capital interests. In mineral-rich areas, entire communities have been displaced to pave the way for corporate exploitation; this has even led to the emergence of armed resistance movements. Today, a number of areas in India is under some form of militarised control. The most extreme example of this is Kashmir. Beyond Kashmir, military forces have been used to displace people in resource-rich areas under the guise of "development."

Due to the nature of global capitalism, Indian capital cannot always be separated from multinational capital. Indian capital is practically interlinked with, among others, US, with India concerning electricity, water, rivers, and industrial sectors. While these agreements reflect competition between capital interests, they also highlight strategic alliances.

Over the past decade, Bangladesh has entered into agreements with India that have significantly favoured the latter's big capital interests. Previous governments also made unequal agreements with India, but the Sheikh Hasina administration showed unprecedented submission. Hasina needed a guarantee of perpetual power without elections, leading to her complete dependence on India. She openly admitted, "What we have given to India, they will remember forever." She further stated that she expected no return. However, it now seems she does seek something in return: her own security.

Whenever Bangladesh's issues with India are discussed, the 1971 Liberation War is brought up. It is true that India supported Bangladesh during our Liberation War. When Pakistan's military launched a brutal genocide, around one crore Bangladeshis took refuge in India. The Indian people provided invaluable support, demonstrating unparalleled empathy and solidarity. We must always remain grateful for this. However, it is important to note that the government in power at that time was led by Congress, not the BJP, which did not even exist then.

Another critical question is: just because the Indian people supported Bangladesh in 1971, does that mean Bangladesh should now be indebted to the Indian government? Should Bangladesh be forced to favour Indian conglomerates like Adani? Must we sacrifice the Sundarbans, our airports, seaports, and borders to serve India's interest over our own? A state is never benevolent—its actions are always driven by strategic interests. India's decision to support Bangladesh in 1971 was also strategic. However, the support from the Indian people was driven by humanity and ideology. While we remain thankful for the Indian people's past support, that does not mean that we have to give in to India's capitalist exploitation.

The people of Bangladesh have specific grievances, problems, and opinions regarding India. Among these are water and river disputes, border killings, transit issues, unbalanced trade, and political interference in Bangladesh's internal affairs. And grievances against India's current foreign policy stance are not limited to Bangladesh alone; it has also attempted to exert influence over Nepal, Bhutan, the Maldives, and Sri Lanka. Consequently, India has different levels of distrust, conflicts, and tensions with these countries as well. The problems between us, therefore, are not just communal issues; rather, they stem from the "big brother" attitude of a powerful state and its large capital.

For the interest of the people of the region, we badly need a peaceful, democratic South Asia. To eliminate unrest, violence, and inequality in South Asia, we need collective efforts. In this regard, it is also important to recognise how the Indian people themselves are victims of the existing system. Ultimately, the interests of the people of South Asia, including India, are fundamentally aligned.

Our common struggle should, therefore, be for a South Asia free from oppression, inequality, and imperialistic control. To achieve this, it is now more crucial than ever to build solidarity among the people of the entire region.

"Bangladeshi and Swedish Baba," the photo exhibition inspired by Swedish photographer Johan Bävman, featured many of the "babas" whose voices echoed this reflection— We say we love our children more than anything. We dream of giving them a better life, a better world. We cheer them on at school plays, celebrate their birthdays, and promise that the future is theirs. And yet, when it comes to shaping the future, really shaping it, we don't walk the talk.

The images exhibited tell stories of love, commitment, and the quiet but powerful shifts in attitude towards fatherhood. Through words and experiences, one question emerges: If we adore our children and want the best for them, why are we, as a society, still holding on to outdated ideas about what it means to be a father?

How often do fathers truly assume responsibilities beyond the provider role? Society still tells fathers that their job is to earn, and to be the pillar of financial stability. But when did fatherhood become a paycheck rather than a presence? Many of the fathers in the exhibition shared how they once thought caregiving was a mother's duty, until they stepped into it themselves and realised the deep, life-changing bond that comes with being fully involved with your children.

Many societies admire the fathers who change diapers, take their children to school, cook dinner—not because it should be remarkable, but because it still feels like an exception. Why? Because we are told—from generation to generation—that certain roles belong to men and others to women. That fathers "help", but mothers "raise". That fathers' involvement is optional, while mothers' is expected.

But let us flip that script for a moment. What if real fatherhood meant being fully present? What if being a great "baba" was not just about playing the hero in big moments but in the small, everyday ones—listening, teaching, standing up against inequality and injustice. Perhaps then, our sons and daughters can grow up in a world where roles are not decided by gender, but by capacity, effort, and dedication.

This is not just about personal choices; it is about societal transformation. Research highlights that involved fathers help shift established gender norms and that children who grow up seeing their fathers equally engaged in caregiving are less likely to reinforce rigid gender roles as adults. In addition, when men share unpaid care work, women have greater opportunities to pursue education and employment—strengthening families and economies alike. Research by the International Labour Organization shows that closing the gender gap in labour force participation could boost gross domestic product (GDP) by over 30 percent in countries like Bangladesh.

Fathers influence the way their children see relationships and understand respect and fairness. If we want a more equal world, we have to start at home. We can teach our sons that strength is not dominance, and we can show our daughters that they deserve the same opportunities as their brothers. But we can only do that if we step up, if we break the cycle of outdated expectations.

The young generation is watching. They learn from what we do more than what we say. If we want them to believe in equality, we have to live and exemplify it. If we want them to thrive in a more just world, we have to help build it—starting with the way we father.

So, the question is: what kind of future do we really want for our children? And what are we willing to do, as fathers, to make it happen? Bangladesh stands at a crucial moment where shifting social norms can redefine the roles of men in caregiving and beyond.

The "Bangladeshi and Swedish Baba" photo exhibition will have its final show in Dhaka on March 7 at the Jahangirnagar University after travelling across Bangladesh, where it has sparked dialogues and reflections on gender stereotypes, while demonstrating how active fatherhood can be a transformative force for positive social change.

BOOK REVIEW: NONFICTION

FROM PROTESTS TO POWER: The journey to Bangladesh’s July Uprising

Review of ‘Bidroho Theke Biplob: Nirapod Shorok Andolon O July Obhbhutthan’ (Oitijhya Publication, 2025) by Anupam Debashish Roy

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

MAHMUDA EMDAD

Over the past couple of decades, Bangladesh has witnessed three significant social and political movements that have shaped the course of its history. From the uproar over VAT on education to the Quota Reform Movement, culminating in the July Uprising of 2024, these movements have not only spanned a broad spectrum of issues—ranging from education reform to legislative changes but have also seen the active participation of people from all walks of life. Predominantly led by students, these upheavals against perceived injustices and authoritarianism are vividly captured in Bidroho Theke Biplob, a compelling narrative that seeks to connect the dots between past activism and the monumental July Uprising of 2024.

In Bidroho Theke Biplob, the author delves into a profound analysis of the pivotal political movements in Bangladesh, specifically comparing the Road Safety Movement of 2018 and the monumental July Uprising of 2024. The text seeks to uncover why the 2018 movement, despite its intensity and widespread support, was more readily suppressed by the authoritarian regime of the time, which employed extensive measures to quell the protests. In contrast, the July Uprising not only sustained its momentum but also achieved its monumental goal: the overthrow of an entrenched government that had dominated for roughly 16 years.

The author ingeniously captures and juxtaposes the essence of both movements, providing readers with a vivid retrospective that highlights what was effective and what faltered. This comparative study not only brings to light the continuous struggle and evolution of the student-led activism in Bangladesh but also emphasises the political maturation of the participants over the intervening years. Most of them were the same students from 2018 who carried with them not just the scars of past suppression but a sophisticated understanding of political oppression, legislative injustices, and the dynamics of mobilisation. It articulates how the July Uprising differed fundamentally from its predecessor in its organisation and political backing. Unlike the leaderless Road Safety Movement, the July Uprising was characterised by its political drive and leadership, partly orchestrated by the Gonoratrik Chhatra Shakti and various other political entities. This strategic evolution in leadership and political collaboration is what fortified the movement, enabling it to adapt and persist, ultimately leading to a successful overthrow of the regime.

Bidroho Theke Biplob goes beyond mere chronicling of events to provide a critical analysis of the strategies employed during the Road Safety Movement of 2018 and the July Uprising of 2024. A significant part of the book is dedicated to analysing the impact of rhetoric used by political leaders during these periods. Notably, the author examines how the former prime minister’s inflammatory remarks about “razakars” in mid-July of 2024 spurred a substantial number of students, previously hesitant, to join the protests. This analysis is presented not just as a recount of events but as a critical examination of how specific words can act as catalysts in volatile political climates. Furthermore, during the Road Safety Movement of 2018, the satirical expressions and dismissive comments about student deaths by the then-Minister of Road and Transport, Shajahan Khan, also played a crucial role. His controversial statements, which seemed to trivialise the tragedies affecting young lives, significantly inflamed the student body and broadened the scope of the protests.

The narrative also credits social media as a formidable tool in orchestrating these movements. The author explores how digital platforms were used to amplify the protests’ reach and engage a broader audience, which was crucial in maintaining the momentum of both movements. The strategic use of memes, viral content, and videos is highlighted as a key component in energising and sustaining participant involvement, transforming social media from a mere communication tool into a powerful agent of change.

Further enriching the narrative, the book includes interviews with six activists who participated in these movements. These interviews offer a window into the emotional and intellectual landscape of the participants, providing insights into what drove them to take action, their reflections on the effectiveness of their strategies, and their perceptions of the movements’ successes and shortcomings. From this academic and personal vantage point, the author presents a multifaceted picture of modern activism. Readers gain not just a historical understanding of these significant events but also a profound appreciation of the complex interplay between strategy, leadership, and the power of collective action. This dual approach of combining detailed narrative with personal accounts makes Bidroho Theke Biplob an invaluable resource for understanding the nuances of political resistance and the evolution of student-led movements in Bangladesh.

While it provides a comprehensive analysis of the July Uprising of 2024 and its roots in the Road Safety Movement of 2018, the book is not without its potential criticisms. One notable omission noted by readers, however, is the limited depiction of the broader cross-section of society that participated in the July Uprising. Post-July 18 and 19, as the movement gained unprecedented momentum, it wasn’t just the students at the frontlines; masses from various walks of life joined in, many laying down their lives in the quest for justice and the ousting of the authoritarian regime. But the book primarily focuses on the student activism aspect, which, while central, does not fully encapsulate the widespread national involvement that characterised this historical period. The book concludes with probing questions that aim to unearth deeper insights into the movement’s dynamics. The author posits a poignant inquiry about the true orchestrators of the July Uprising, a topic of much debate and speculation. He suggests that the masterminds were not just a few individuals but rather the collective effort of all those involved—whether directly or indirectly. This includes numerous student leaders from politically active backgrounds who emerged as pivotal figures during the protests. By framing the uprising as a collective endeavour, the author emphasises the decentralised and inclusive nature of the leadership that contributed to its success.

As a work of academic significance, Bidroho Theke Biplob stands out not only as a narrative recount of significant historical events but also as a piece of scholarly research. Authored by a researcher, activist, and journalist currently pursuing a PhD at the University of Oxford, this book serves as part of his thesis and is a valuable contribution to the academic study of political movements. For those in academia or anyone looking to analyse the nuances of the July Uprising from a scholarly viewpoint, this book offers a compelling and insightful read, making it a noteworthy addition to the literature on contemporary social movements in Bangladesh.

Literature thrives beyond the centre too

SHAHRIAR SHAAMS

“All literature is regional; or conversely, no literature is regional”—is a common sentiment to have today, but I had first read those lines from Joyce Carol Oates, in her preface to a book of stories by one of Canada’s most gifted storytellers, Alistair MacLeod. In MacLeod’s short stories, his Cape Breton Island was a refrain through which the momentous lives of his ordinary characters came through. I vividly remember how I wept after reading the short story “The Boat” and each time I went back to it, I knew how special this place had to be, beyond the familiarity of the city and amidst desires borne out of relative insignificance.

It is due to the urge that we must give our due to the poetry and prose written outside the capital, for literature thrives beyond the centre too, that I had decided to highlight the following books. I had found something of that fervour that is missing in the works of writers based here in Dhaka.

UTHOLLO
Sadia Sultana
Oitijhya, 2025

Sadia Sultana’s seventh novel Uthollo is perhaps one of the most underrated novels to be published this year. “Uthollo” refers to the peripatetic and the nomadic, and in Sultana’s novel they are the biharis, the stranded Pakistanis, who must make a living in a land increasingly hostile towards them. The characters in Uthollo are all too real. Sultana mentions her countless moments of research, navigating through the camps in Saidpur, Rangpur, and unable to document the stories conventionally, opting finally to novelise these lives. A judge by profession and based in Dinajpur, Sultana’s knack for striking prose is worth a read, especially in this novel.

ILLUSTRATION: AMREETA LETHE

GUPTO GAAN
Shekhar Dev
Shakhs, 2025

Shekhar Dev is a prominent poet based in the port city. In his latest book of poems, Gupto Gaan, he takes on the beginnings of the Mahabharata—a skillful tribute that does not resort to banal devotion. The poet, an adept translator and novelist as well, manages to blend faith and desire with considerable ease. As he narrates the events of an epic, contemporary anxieties creep in, so does the fear of failure and succumbing to petty, material comforts. One set of verses end with, “Adventures of the instinct is half-hearted...at times, failure itself proves impossible”, cautioning for more level-headedness during trying times. Another poem talks about the religion of “survival” and how “[w]ithout self-knowledge, how can one live?” Gupto Gaan is a short, yet notable book that illustrates the power of poetry and an interesting, modern take of a universal tale.

SONAR KHATAI CHORANO
JIBON
Mamun Rashid
Behula Bangla, 2024

Mamun Rashid, a poet and journalist, brings to his prose a liveliness seeped in the appreciation of the past. Sonar Khatai Chorano Jibon is a series of sketches of the poet’s life. In it one finds Rashid candidly discussing his writerly life, his dismal performances in school, and of lost friendships. One brief yet longing chapter begins with lyrics to a forgotten song: “Bidesh giye bondhu tumi amay bhuilo na/chithi dio, potro dio, janayo thikana”, followed by accounts of drifting friendships in Bogra. Mamun Rashid’s prose, much like his poetry, has the tendency to move the reader through the simplest of words.

JANMANDHO GHORA
Bango Rakhai
Anupraman Prokashon, 2023

The young poet Bango Rakhai (from Jhenaidah who runs a library in his village on weekends) first came to my attention through an anthology of writing about Pagla Kanai—the Bangali mystic and folk singer—which he had edited. Over the years, he had written a lot of poetry, heavily influenced by folk traditions of Bangladesh. Indeed, in Janmandho Ghora, we see the poet at his strongest, with verses that try to emulate the devotional and hypnotic aspects of baul. “The body is merely a casting, a quest till death/A poem is a soul—and the soul is poetry”, he says. In poems like “Khuda” (hunger), he talks of the incurable blindness of a society full of individuals and their unfulfilled desires. “Everyday I go to the Shopping Mall, dreaming like Aladdin/I see storms...Now only a little food is needed.” While Rakhai has come out recently with more books of essays, it is this collection of poems which readers might find more suitable to enjoy.

‘Retirement call should come from seniors’ end’

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president Faruque Ahmed attended Champions Trophy semifinal between South Africa and New Zealand in Lahore yesterday. During New Zealand’s innings, he spoke to travelling Bangladeshi journalists, including The Daily Star’s Samsul Arefin Khan, on diplomatic ties with cricket boards and BCB’s stance on senior players after Bangladesh’s group-stage exit. Here are excerpts from the interview:

The Daily Star (DS): Could you tell us more about your trip to Pakistan following Dubai visit?
Faruque Ahmed (FA): The invitation came from the ICC. I feel it’s an opportunity not only to watch the games but also to develop cricketing ties. Apart from that, I’m also looking to secure a few tours in between. I have previously mentioned a white-ball series against Pakistan outside the FTP schedule. I also came here to confirm that series. [In Dubai] my main focus was on strengthening ties with subcontinental teams.

DS: You came to Pakistan at a time when a fresh Bangladesh Premier League-related controversy

Whatever you have achieved, my friend, it has been phenomenal. Whatever you have done as a captain, as a player for Bangladesh, this will be remembered for years and years to come.

Tamim Iqbal lauded Mushfiqur’s career in a video message on his official Facebook page yesterday.

Snippets of ‘phenomenal’ Mushfiqur’s ODI career

Bangladesh batter Mushfiqur Rahim called time on his 19-year ODI career with an announcement on his official Facebook page on Wednesday. Here are some of the 37-year-old cricketer’s ODI highlights:

Mushfiqur played 274 matches – the most in the 50-over format for Bangladesh. The right-handed batter amassed 7795 runs at an average of 36.42 and a strike-rate of 79.70. He scored nine hundreds and 49 half-centuries in the process.

Four of his centuries contributed to winning causes, including an iconic 144 against Sri Lanka -- also his best score in the format -- in the 2018 Asia Cup in Dubai. He scored as many in losing causes, and one century came in a match ending in a no result.

The 37-year-old is also Bangladesh’s second-highest run-getter in ODIs, after Tamim Iqbal (8357).

With nine tons in the format, he sits joint-second, with Shakib Al Hasan, for most centuries for the Tigers.

With the wicket-keeping gloves on, Mushfiqur made 297 dismissals -- the most by a Bangladesh wicket-keeper and the fifth-highest in the format overall. This includes 241 catches behind the stumps and 56 stumpings.

Mushfiqur Rahim is the only Bangladeshi batter who has been dismissed on 99 in ODIs. The wicketkeeper-batter, however, was adjudged player of the match in that Asia Cup Super Four game against Pakistan in Abu Dhabi as the Tigers won the contest by 37 runs.

involving Chittagong Kings brand ambassador Shahid Afridi has emerged.

FA: Actually, the board doesn’t have a three-party deal. We only have contracts with franchises and players. It is entirely the franchise’s decision whom they bring as a brand ambassador. However, when a renowned player like Shahid Afridi makes such comments about a franchise, the blame often falls on the entire nation.

If players’ payments are not made properly, the board can take a stance. However, in such cases, the board cannot do much beyond pushing the franchise or being more cautious about them in the future.

DS: Is there any chance BCB will discuss with Mushfiqur Rahim and Mahmudullah Riyad their final call on international retirement?

FA: Until now, we haven’t had any discussions with them. But I feel the decision should come from their end. We won’t play ODIs until May-June, so we have time to discuss the matter.

DS: You are planning too many series, but the players are not getting breathing space, which affects their performances in big tournaments. This was evident in the Champions Trophy, where they played just days after the BPL.

FA: It’s a valid point, but the FTP and other commitments are extremely hectic. I don’t know how the players manage it. I was thinking that if we could separate white-ball and red-ball squads, it might help players adjust better.

But as you said, ICC events are the platform where teams showcase their progress over the years. These events draw the most attention, and people talk about them, so performing well in them is crucial. Let’s be honest -- our last three ICC events didn’t go well. That’s a fact. We need to try and do better.

Calling it a day the Australian way

ASHEFAQ-UL-ALAM

“I considered maybe giving up ODI cricket after this summer and try and get a bit more Test cricket in over the next 12 months. But a moment came and just gave complete clarity in my mind, and I just knew the time was right,” said Adam Gilchrist after the Adelaide Test against India in 2008, explaining how he had decided to retire from international cricket while playing the match.

The moment of clarity Gilchrist was talking about came on Day 1, when India’s VVS Laxman gave a regulation catch to Gilchrist, but he could not react in time and grassed the chance.

One dropped catch, and Gilchrist immediately knew his time with the baggy green was up.

“I reckon before the ball hit the ground, I turned around at [Matthew] Hayden and said, ‘Mate, I’m done, I’m out,’” Gilchrist described his immediate realisation in an interview in 2021.

Yesterday, another modern-day Australian great called time on his ODI career a day after he top-scored for his side but could not deliver what was expected off of him.

With Australia batting first in the first semifinal of the ICC Champions Trophy against India, Steve Smith came to the crease in the third over after opener Cooper Connolly got out for a nine-ball duck.

Smith absorbed the pressure from the Indian pacers, kept the scoreboard ticking against a skilled spin attack, and brought up his 35th ODI half-century along the way.

But when it was time to press on the accelerator, Smith missed a full toss from Mohammad Shami and was bowled for 73 off 96 balls.

“I missed a full toss. It wasn’t ideal,” Smith said after the match, specifying that as the turning point of the match.

And, within 24 hours, Smith announced he is done with the one-day format.

“It has been a great ride and I have loved every minute of it... Now is a great opportunity for people to start preparing for the 2027 World Cup, so, it feels like the right time to make way,” Smith was quoted in a Cricket Australia press release.

Now, whether his mode of dismissal played a role in his decision to retire is something only Smith himself can clarify.

But Smith’s sudden decision to move on from the format is very much in line with the cricket culture in Australia, where players prefer stepping aside at the right time rather than waiting to be told to move on.

For Bangladesh fans who often see their heroes turn villains over the course of their careers, it won’t be hard to notice the stark cultural difference that exists between the two nations.

Smith’s ODI average in the format had dipped to 35.32 since 2023, but the cricketer who finished on 5800 ODI runs with an average of 43.27, he was still an important figure in the Australian line-up for his ability to buckle down in tough situations.

Smith could’ve strived to join the likes of Ricky Ponting, Glenn McGrath and Gilchrist by winning a third ODI World Cup in 2027, but didn’t, as clinging on to a place in the side by virtue of past achievements and blocking the way for new stars to emerge is just not the Australian way.

Such examples are rare in most cricketing countries and is impossible to find at a place like Bangladesh, where, for out of touch senior players, that moment of clarity never arrives.

SHORT CORNER

No CT final deals one last blow to hosts Pakistan

Pakistan cricket fans and former players seethed Wednesday after the host country’s already disappointing Champions Trophy suffered one last blow: no final. “I am disgusted, neither our team is in the final nor is the final in Pakistan,” said Moeed Ali Khan, a private car driver outside Lahore’s Gaddafi Stadium to watch the second semifinal between South Africa and New Zealand.

The Bangladesh connection of PCB museum curator

It was a bustling day at Lahore’s Gaddafi Stadium. Security personnel, Pakistan Cricket Board (PCB) officials, and staff were all in a rush, finalising preparations for the crucial semifinal clash between New Zealand and South Africa. Despite the heightened security, a small group of Bangladeshi journalists, including this reporter, got an opportunity to visit the iconic PCB Museum, where they were introduced to Yahya Ghaznavi, the museum’s curator. What followed was an unexpected yet deeply personal revelation. Upon learning that we were from Bangladesh, Yahya warmly shared, “I was in Cumilla during the 1971 war.”

World Cup 2026 final to feature halftime show

The 2026 World Cup final will feature its first ever halftime show, FIFA president Gianni Infantino said on Wednesday. “I can confirm the first ever half-time show at a FIFA World Cup final in New York, New Jersey, in association with Global Citizen,” Infantino said on Instagram.

‘No more than a small advantage for Real’

AGENCIES

Real Madrid manager Carlo Ancelotti was pleased with his side’s resilience as they earned a 2-1 win over Atletico Madrid at the Bernabeu in the hard-fought first leg of their Champions League Round of 16 tie on Tuesday.

Ancelotti, however, is seeing the game as it is, saying that they now hold just a slender advantage and nothing more Real Madrid became the first team to win 300 matches in the European Cup/UEFA Champions League.

Real Madrid have won their last five Champions League knockout round games, while they’re unbeaten in 10 consecutive such matches in the competition for the first time.

than that as there is a lot to play in the second leg.

Brahim Diaz scored the second-half winner after Atletico forward Julian Alvarez had cancelled out Rodrygo’s opener.

Vinicius Jr and Kylian Mbappe both missed good chances that could have given Real a bigger margin for the second leg but Ancelotti was not in the mood to lament missed opportunities.

He preferred to stick with the positive which is a win against what he considers one of Europe’s best teams this season, and said his players will need even more effort to make the most of their narrow advantage to advance in their title defence.

“These are evenly matched games. It’s a Round of 16 in the Champions League as it could be a final or a semifinal. Atletico are a top team in Europe, and you can’t think about finishing the tie in the first leg,” Ancelotti told a press conference.

“We’ve gained a small advantage that gives us confidence for the second leg, but that’s it. It was a difficult match ... as usual. It always is against Atletico.

“In the first half, we lost too many balls, we had unnecessary mistakes that almost cost us, they levelled the game with Julian Alvarez. But in the second half we were better. We were able to take advantage and we did it.”

Atletico Madrid manager Diego Simeone, meanwhile, was disappointed that his side failed to capitalise on the control they had for long periods of the game.

“We should have taken better advantage when we had control of the game,” Simeone said.

The Argentine said he was confident that the atmosphere at their home ground would give Atletico “a stimulus” and that while his team go into the second leg behind, it could have been much worse had Real taken a late chance on Tuesday.

Real’s Kylian Mbappe failed to find Vinicius Jr with a pass in the final moments of the match that could have led to another goal.

“Maybe the hope of that no goal opens the door for what’s to come,” he said.

The winners of the tie will most certainly meet Arsenal, who are in a virtually unassailable position to reach the quarterfinals after a 7-1 victory at PSV Eindhoven in Tuesday’s first leg.

SOUTH ASIAN ATHLETICS CHAMPIONSHIPS

No Imranur in 14-member Bangladesh team

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Athletics Federation (BAF) picked 14 athletes while leaving out England-based sprinter Imranur Rahman for preparation for the South Asian Senior Athletics Championships, which are scheduled to take place in Ranchi, Jharkhand from May 3-5.

Bangladeshi athletes will compete in six men’s events -- 100m sprint, 400m sprint, 400m hurdles, 110m hurdles, long jump and high jump, and three women’s events -- 100m sprint, high jump and long jump.

Out of the 14 selected athletes, 11 won gold medals in their respective events in the just-concluded 48th National Athletics Championships while three of them won silver and bronze medals in 100m men’s and women’s sprint events.

“We have picked those who performed well in the national championships and their timings were close to the 2019 SA Games ones,” BAF general secretary Shah Alam told The Daily Star.

Asked why they did not consider Imranur, the country’s fastest sprinter, Alam said: “We will call him for trial when we start preparation for the South Asian Games. If he can pass the trial, he will represent Bangladesh again.”

The five-time fastest sprinter Imranur skipped the national championships in a bid to avoid picking up injury following a surgery but he has been in training in England. He even claimed that he would be available for selection for next international competitions.

The selected athletes will train at the Army Stadium in Banani from March 6 to May 1, with Bangladesh Army Sports Control Board providing track, gymnasium and training kits while the athletes will stay at the stadium’s BOA dormitory.

BAF joint secretary Mohammad Kitab Ali will act as coordinator while Farid Khan Chowdhury, Abdullah Hel Kafi and Foujia Huda Jui have been nominated as coaches for the residential camp.

Squad: M Ismail, M Rakibul Hasan, M Jubail Islam (100m), Jahir Rayhan (400m) Mahfuzur Rahman (High Jump), Najimul Hossain Roni (400m hurdles) and md Masud Rana (110m hurdles), Md Tanvir Faisal (110m hurdles) and Md Al-Amin (Marathon). Shirin Akter and Sumaiya Dewan (100m women’s sprint), Md Ritu Akhtar (high jump) and (Sonia Akter (long jump).

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Pakistan's Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Ishaq Dar is set to visit Bangladesh in April as part of efforts to boost bilateral ties following the ouster of the Awami League government last year.

The diplomatic relationship between the two countries worsened during the 15 years of the AL government.

For instance, the last time a Pakistani foreign minister visited Bangladesh was in 2012, when Hina Rabbani Khar came for a 12-hour visit. In 2022, Bilawal Bhutto Zardari, then foreign minister of Pakistan, attended the D-8 ministerial conference virtually.

After the political changeover in August last year, Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus and Pakistan's Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif spoke on the phone and met twice --

Hasina, clan to be tried in person or in absentia

Yunus tells Sky News

BSS, Dhaka

Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus has said ousted prime minister Sheikh Hasina will stand trial for crimes against humanity.

"A trial will be taking place. Not only her, but also all the people who are associated with her -- her family members, her clans or associates," Prof Yunus said in an interview with Sky News published yesterday.

Hasina is accused of overseeing a system of enforced disappearances during her time in office, as well as for the mass killing of protesters in July and August last year, the Sky News mentioned.

She is accused of overseeing a network of secret detention centres where it's alleged her political opponents were interrogated, tortured, and some killed -- all under the banner of a "war on terror". After she was toppled by the protests fled to India on August 5, Bangladesh's International Crimes Tribunal issued two arrest warrants for her.

Bangladesh had sent formal letters for her extradition but received no official response from New Delhi, Prof Yunus said.

However, he insisted that Hasina would face the court, whether

Protest halts work at BSEC

Officials confine chairman, 3 commissioners after ED forced to retire

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The activities of the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission came to a halt yesterday due to officials' protest against the forced retirement of Saifur Rahman, an executive director.

The protesters confined Chairman Khondkar Rashid Maksud and three commissioners to the BSEC meeting room for around four hours yesterday.

The demonstrators demanded the resignation of the chairman and the commissioners and withdrawal of the order that sent Saifur into forced retirement.

They also threatened to go on indefinite work abstention from today if their demands were not met.

Among other demands, they sought a stop to the issuance of any show-cause notices on BSEC officials through "disputed investigations" and cancellations of previously issued show-cause notices.

The protesting officials also demanded that a lawyer be appointed by the BSEC for 127 officials whose recruitment was controversial.

A writ petition was filed last September against their recruitment amid allegations that due process was not followed.

The demonstrators also demanded an end to alleged mistreatment of officials and insisted on an apology.

Investors apparently remained indifferent as the benchmark index DSEX closed marginally higher yesterday.

This is the first time BSEC has seen such agitation by its officials since its inception in 1993.

In August last year, protests were held on a smaller scale against the appointment of M Masrur Reaz as the chairman of the regulatory body. Masrur then refrained from joining the office.

Prof Shibli Rubayat-Ul Islam, who had been the chairman during the Hasina regime, landed in jail for alleged corruption after Hasina's ouster.

During the protest yesterday, officials did not allow anyone, including journalists, to enter the commission building. They cut electricity supply for a couple of hours when they had confined the four top officials.

Army personnel arrived and entered the office by climbing over the

119 killed by mobs in 7 months: HRSS

2024 deadliest year in past decade; 201 reported cases of mob beatings

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Mob beatings have surged with at least 119 people killed and 74 injured in 114 incidents since the interim government took office in August 2024, according to the Human Rights Support Society (HRSS).

In a press statement, signed by its Executive Director Ejazul Islam, the rights organisation said the highest number of mob beatings in the last decade occurred in 2024, with at least 201 reported cases. These incidents, counted from the beginning of the year, resulted in 179 deaths and 88 injuries.

Though mob beatings were already commonplace, there has been a rise in such incidents after the August 5 political changeover.

Previously, the key reasons included suspicions of theft, robbery, or mugging; however, in the aftermath of August 5, many incidents of mob violence were related to political score-settling.

The continuation of such violence even months after the interim government took office is worrying and exposes how the law and order situation remains vulnerable, according to rights activists.

HRSS statement added that in 2025, at least 30 cases were recorded in the first two months alone, leading to 19 deaths and 20 injuries.

Between 2015 and 2024, Bangladesh witnessed 1,009 mob beating incidents, resulting in 792 deaths and 765 injuries, according to HRSS data and various media reports.

However, the actual figures could be even higher due to underreporting, the organisation added.

Several recent incidents highlight the brutal nature of mob beatings.

In 2025, at least 30 cases were recorded in the first two months alone, leading to 19 deaths and 20 injuries.

On March 3, two individuals were beaten to death in Chattogram's Aulia union after being accused of robbery. On February 28, five people were killed by a mob in Madaripur's Dasar upazila. A day earlier, on February 27, two individuals were beaten and hung upside down.

On December 15, 2024, an unidentified man died in a mob beating in Rajshahi's Shitalakkhya area. On September 20, a former Chhatra League leader named Shamim Mollah was beaten to death by a mob at Jahangirnagar University, and the day before, a young man named Tolazzal suffered the same fate at Dhaka University.

Govt to blame if crimes against women are spurred on

Says univ teachers body

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The University Teachers' Network yesterday said if continuous sexual harassment, violence, and hatred against women are encouraged, the government and parties concerned must take the responsibility.

The network, comprising university teachers, demanded thorough investigations, justice, and punishment for every instance of sexual harassment and violence against women.

The teachers also denounced the unjust expulsion of nine female students from Chittagong University (CU).

"The nine female students have been expelled in an undemocratic and authoritarian manner, which we consider a systematic form of oppression against women," reads the statement.

There are allegations that the CU assistant proctor and a professor sent messages to members of various political organisations, requesting that they demonstrate in front of the proctor's office under the banner of Students Against Discrimination, demanding that the expulsion of nine students be upheld, says the statement.

NZ crush SA to set up final against India

AFP, Lahore

Rachin Ravindra and Kane Williamson struck hundreds as New Zealand eased to a 50-run win over South Africa in Lahore on Wednesday to set up a rematch with India in the Champions Trophy final.

Ravindra made 108 off 101 balls and Williamson hit 102 off 94 deliveries as New Zealand posted a Champions Trophy record 362-6 before restricting South Africa to 312-9.

David Miller finished unbeaten on 100 but his 67-ball innings came in vain with the game already well out of reach, as South Africa suffered their fifth Champions Trophy semi-final defeat after those in 2000, 2002, 2006 and 2013.

They won the first edition of the tournament in Bangladesh in 1998, when it was named the ICC KnockOut Trophy.

New Zealand captain Mitchell Santner excelled with the ball and took 3-43 with his left-arm spin, breaking a 105-run partnership for South Africa's second wicket by removing rival skipper Temba Bavuma for 56.

Bavuma started slowly before steadying the innings with Rassie van der Dussen, who scored a fluent 69 before being deceived by a beautiful delivery from Santner.

Santner then dealt a critical blow when he dismissed Heinrich Klaasen for three, caught by a diving Matt Henry at long-on, dashing South Africa's hopes of pulling off the highest chase in the tournament's history.
