THE MISSING OF THE JULY UPRISING ■ PART 1

Hastily buried in unmarked graves

Seven months after the July uprising in Bangladesh, many protesters still remain missing. We investigated 31 cases: six were buried as unclaimed bodies at Rayerbazar graveyard; four were identified by families from among the charred bodies in Ashulia; two were handed over to families after DNA testing; and 19 are still unaccounted for. We found evidence of systematic government efforts to cover up medical records and bodies of the victims so they can never be found again. This four-part series also documents how families were denied time to collect the corpses from hospital morgues, and how they are now waiting for the bodies of their loved ones.

MASHFIQ MIZAN, KEERADHAN AHMED and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

On July 18, 2024, two days after Abu Sayed's killing in Rangpur, Sohel Rana stepped out of his home in Dhaka's Jatrabari around 6:00pm to join the quota reform movement. He told his mother he would be back soon, but he never did.

Around an hour after he joined the protest in Jatrabari area, police detained Sohel, 28, tortured him, and then shot him several times, four fellow protesters and a person who admitted him to Dhaka Medical College Hospital told him when he was crossing Uttara to get a bus. He then vanished.

The same day in Uttara, Md Assadullah, a driver and a father of two, was shot by Awami League-affiliated helmeted assailants, according to CCTV camera footage and multiple still images verified by The Daily Star.

Sohel, Faisal and Assadullah never knew each other in life. But their fates converged in death.

Their bodies, along with many others, ended up at Dhaka Medical College morgue. Unidentified, unclaimed.

A nationwide curfew, intended to quash the movement, kept their families from finding them,

In Block 4 of Rayerbazar graveyard lie many unidentified victims of the July atrocities.

The Daily Star. His inquest report, prepared by Shahbagh police, confirms he had multiple pellet wounds on both sides of his chest and bruises on different parts of his body.

Faisal Sarker, 18, a college student who also worked as a supervisor of a bus company, left home for work at Abdullapur bus stand in Uttara on July 19. By the time he got out, the crackdown on the streets was getting worse.

He called his mother to tell her that he was coming home, in Cumilla, to stay with her until the situation stabilised. His family last heard of and the six were hurriedly buried in unmarked graves at Rayerbazar before their relatives could collect their bodies, an investigation by The Daily Star has found.

Meanwhile, at least 19 more families we spoke to continue searching for their fathers, sons, brothers or husbands whom they lost during the July uprising. But they don't know if they will ever find them as there are hardly any efforts from the government to resolve the mystery of these missing men.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN Protest march foiled by police

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police and anti rape protesters clashed when the latter tried to break a police barricade and submit a memorandum to Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus at his residence.

Several individuals from both sides were injured in the incident that occurred around 3:30pm in front of the InterContinental hotel.

The protesters' demands include removal of the home adviser for what they say is his failure to ensure women's safety and maintain law and order.

The demonstrators, under the banner of Bangladesh against rape and oppression, marched from Dhaka University to the intersection in front of the hotel, and as they tried to break a police barricade, the cops and the protesters shoved each other and some engaged in fistfights.

At one stage, police used batons, witnesses said.

Several policemen and women protesters were injured, they added.

Adrita Roy, one of the protesters, said, "We were peacefully protesting, but the police attacked us, including the women. Women were at the forefront of our march."

Even male police members assaulted female protesters, she added.

People, govt to decide whether AL should be banned, says Salahuddin

WASIM BIN HABIB and SAJJAD HOSSAIN

It has been seven months since the interim government took office. During this time, the caretaker administration has been working to revive the political process and strengthen state institutions.

Meanwhile, participants in the July uprising have floated a new political party.

Against this backdrop, Wasim Bin Habib and Sajjad Hossain of The Daily Star recently sat down with Salahuddin Ahmed, a standing committee member and key policymaker of the BNP, to discuss the party's views on the interim government's performance, the formation of the student-led National Citizen Party, the progress toward the forthcoming national elections, and the future of the Awami League.

The Daily Star: Chief Adviser Prof

Muhammad Yunus has announced that the next national election is planned for either December this year or mid-next year. How optimistic are you about the announcement?

Salahuddin Ahmed: During our last meeting with the chief adviser, where we discussed various matters, he assured us that preparations are underway to hold the elections by December. We are quite optimistic that he will present a detailed roadmap to the nation, specifying when and how he plans to conduct the elections within that time frame.

As the constitutional authority, the Election Commission is responsible for holding the national polls. In regular circumstances, at the end of the tenure of an elected parliament, the Election Commission can independently carry

There is at least Tk 600 crore in these bank accounts.

Judge Zakir Hossain of Dhaka Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court passed the order yesterday after ACC Deputy Director Monirul Islam, who is leading a team of investigators, submitted an application for the order.
