Grabbers choke Kalir Chhara canal in Ctg

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

Encroachers have illegally filled large sections of the Kalir Chhara canal in Chattogram's Akbar Shah area to build various structures, including multi-storey buildings.

These unauthorised constructions have blocked the canal's natural upstream flow at many points.

Once a vital drainage route, the canal used to channel rainwater into the Bay of Bengal efficiently, playing a key role in preventing waterlogging. However, rampant encroachment and the destruction of the canal's natural course have rendered it ineffective.

As a result, during the monsoon season, rainwater has nowhere to go and accumulates rapidly, leading to severe and prolonged waterlogging across the surrounding areas.

According to a recent digital survey by the Water Development Board (WDB), there are 31 illegal structures of various sizes along the 5.5 kilometre canal originating from the hilly area of the city.

"The encroachers have turned the canal into a narrow drain and even altered its course.

Previously, because our area is hilly, waterlogging never occurred. However, over the past five years, waterlogging has started to occur at several key points," said Shafiqul Islam, a local resident and environmental activist.

During a recent visit to three points of the canal, this correspondent observed that the once-wide waterbody has now been reduced to a narrow drain, only 8 to 10 feet across in some areas.

At the Harbatali point, several multi-storey buildings have been their acquired lands, and there have been widespread allegations of corruption and embezzlement.

The statement also mentioned instances like Sonargaon, where private investors deliberately destroyed agricultural land by filling it with sand before declaring it an economic zone.
