JULY UPRISING

‘I just did what any teacher should’

College teacher recalls standing up to protect students from violence

On July 18, 2024, tensions flared outside the home of Aklima Akter, an assistant professor at Kabi Nazrul Government College.

harassed, and beaten.

Just across from her home stood a local Awami League office, and the situation was quickly spiralling out of control.

“I could see everything from above,” Aklima recalled. “First, they tried to push the students away. Then they started beating them.

And I could not just watch.” So, she stepped into the chaos.

“I saw a boy being hit. I rushed downstairs,” she said. “They said he was a terrorist. I asked, ‘Where is his weapon?’ They couldn’t show anything.”

That moment, captured on video, went viral. It showed Aklima shielding students and confronting men twice her size with calm yet firm resolve. She was risking everything for a student she didn’t even know.

“No, he wasn’t from my college,” she said. “I didn’t know his name. But he was a student, and that was enough.”

Later that day, a clip from a live TV broadcast circulated online, showing Aklima in a heated exchange with police and unidentified men in plain clothes. As she tried to shield students, she was being called a “Razakar”.

The International Crimes Tribunal 2 yesterday set August 6 for delivering its decision on whether to frame charges or discharge 30 accused in connection with the killing of Abu Sayed, a student of Begum Rokeya University, Rangpur, and one of the martyrs of the July 2024 uprising.

The three-member tribunal, headed by Justice Nozrul Islam Chowdhury, fixed the date after wrapping up hearings from both the prosecution and the defence.

On Monday, the prosecution urged the tribunal to indict the accused, including former BRU vice-chancellor Md Hasibur Rashid, former Rangpur Metropolitan Police (RPMP) commissioner Md Moniruzzaman, and former BRU proctor Shariful Islam, for their alleged roles in crimes against humanity during the uprising.

The following two days saw arguments from four state-appointed lawyers representing 24 absconding accused, along with defence counsels for six others currently in custody.

Earlier on June 30, the tribunal took cognisance of
