So, the proposal was welcomed by most party members.
“We’re still discussing it. If the alliance isn’t formed before the election, we’ll remain independent. We have no plans to ally with the BNP or Jamaat,” she said.

The potential nine-party coalition would reportedly include six parties currently under the “Gonotontro Moncho” – ASM Abdur Rob-led Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal (JSD), Nagorik Oikya, Biplobi Workers Party, Ganosamhati Andolon, Bhasani Janashakti Party, and Rashtira Sanskar Andolan.

Sources said the bloc will remain united and join any new alliance collectively.
A leader from Ganosamhati Andolon, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Zonayed Saki-led party is “keeping its options open” and could align with either the BNP or NCP.

Apart from the AB Party, every other party in the proposed alliance is also reportedly in active discussions about forming an alliance with the BNP.

Grassroots women leading fight

At the event, 10 grassroots women were recognised as climate champions at the Climate Champion Awards 2025 for their outstanding contributions to environmental conservation, community mobilisation, and adaptation initiatives. The awards were presented at the Annual Community of Practices (CoP) Network Convention 2025, which brought together 100 women-led civil society organisations from across Bangladesh. The event showcased gender-responsive, locally led adaptation practices that promote climate resilience at the community level.

leading the fight for climate resilience -- at home, in their communities, and across disaster-prone regions -- and emphasised that empowering women is key to sustainable transformation in the country’s climate response.
“We must balance investment in mega infrastructure projects with increased allocations to protect people living in river erosion and disaster-prone areas,” she added.
Nicolas Weeks, ambassador of Sweden to Bangladesh, said, “Women are even stronger leaders of climate action. You are innovating, organising, and leading change in your communities. Sweden is proud to support the EmPower project through UN Women and UNEP.”

Anam, executive director of MJF, said, “Women are the true drivers of resilience in their communities. Recognising their efforts and amplifying their leadership is essential for a sustainable and climate-secure Bangladesh.”
She emphasised the urgent need for gender-responsive policies, acknowledging that women in rural and marginalised communities are often on the frontline of climate challenges.
Kazi Rabeya Ame, programme analyst – gender and climate change, UN Women Bangladesh, and Nasrin Ahmed, programme manager of MJF, presented the project brief.

During the meetings, both sides discussed strengthening defence and security cooperation between Bangladesh and Pakistan. They also exchanged views on expanding collaboration through joint training programmes, seminars, and official visits, the services said in notifications.
The Pakistani delegation arrived in Dhaka on October 24 on a five-day official visit.

Nicolas Weeks, ambassador of Sweden to Bangladesh, said, “Women are even stronger leaders of climate action. You are innovating, organising, and leading change in your communities. Sweden is proud to support the EmPower project through UN Women and UNEP.”
Diepak Elmer, head of cooperation at the Embassy of Switzerland, added, “Resilience built from the ground up is the only kind that endures. Bangladesh’s women and grassroots leaders show that leadership does not always come from the top – it comes from those who act and inspire others to do the same.”

The convention featured ten stalls showcasing grassroots innovations and three parallel sessions on renewable energy and financing, policy and practice, and women’s leadership in collective climate action. The sessions were facilitated by Sabrina Nourin, senior programme manager, CED, BRAC University; Md Shamsuddoha, chief executive, Centre for Participatory Research and Development; and Shoma Datta, programme manager, MJF.

Meanwhile, Pakistan’s ISPR said in a press release, quoted by the Dawn newspaper, that during the meeting with General Waker, both sides “appreciated the positive trajectory of expanding defence cooperation” and agreed to maintain “regular exchange visits at various tiers of military leadership”.
It further noted that both sides “recognised the emerging challenges posed by disruptive and divisive disinformation efforts across multiple platforms” and reaffirmed the need for “enhanced cooperation and joint efforts to effectively counter these threats”.

UN Women Bangladesh Country Representative Gitanjali Singh said, “Bangladeshi grassroots women are turning climate risks into opportunities for collective change. Real transformation begins in communities like Kurigram and Satkhira, led by women like you.”
Speaking at the convention, Shaheen

On October 25, General Mirza paid a courtesy call on Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus at the State Guest House Jamuna.

Under this collaboration, the scholarship programme will award 150 final-year students from agricultural universities across the country. The initiative aims to recognise not only academic excellence but also the potential, vision, and commitment of students dedicated to advancing the future of Bangladesh’s agriculture sector.

The application window will open in November 2025 through a dedicated scholarship portal hosted by The Daily Star. The programme will conclude with an award ceremony in December, where the selected students will be honoured for their outstanding results and achievements in agricultural education.
