BNP wants ROs from commission, not the admin

Jamaat questions reshuffles in police, admin; NCP says candidates must not use alliance partner's symbols

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR and AHMED DEEPTO

Major political parties yesterday urged the Election Commission to assert its constitutional authority, remain free of government influence, and clarify the electoral code of conduct.

The appeal came during the EC's ongoing dialogue with political parties at its Agargaon office ahead of the national election planned for early February.

The BNP pressed for greater institutional neutrality, proposing that returning and assistant returning officers be appointed from within the EC rather than the civil administration.

Jamaat-e-Islami questioned recent transfers in the local administration and police, while the newly registered National Citizen Party (NCP) reiterated its demand that candidates use only their own party symbols, even when contesting under alliance banners. Some other parties urged the EC to scrap this provision.

Chief Election Commissioner AMM Nasir Uddin said many recommendations from the Electoral Reform Commission had already been incorporated into the code of conduct and the Representation of the People Order.

"Preparing the code of conduct is not the main challenge; compliance is what matters. We hope the parties will play their expected role in adhering to it," he said.

Child marriage still a bleak shadow on Bangladesh

It could take Bangladesh more than 200 years to eliminate child marriage at the current pace of decline, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) has warned.

The concern comes ahead of World Children's Day, whose theme this year, "My Day, My Rights", underscores how millions of girls are still denied their basic rights to safety, education, and autonomy.

Progress on ending child marriage remains alarmingly slow, particularly among adolescent girls aged 15-19, according to preliminary findings of the Multiple Indicator Cluster

Survey (MICS) 2025, released by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics with UNICEF's technical support on Sunday.

While the proportion of women aged 20-24 who were married before 18 has fallen from 51.4 percent in 2019 to 47.2 percent this year, the rate of currently married girls aged 15-19 has risen sharply from 32.9 percent to 38.9 percent.

The contrast shows that although fewer women today report being married as children, child marriage among today's adolescents is increasing — signalling deep-rooted social norms that continue to endanger girls' health, rights, and futures.

9% children doing hazardous work

MICS survey reveals steep climb in child labour over 6 years

NILIMA JAHAN

Bangladesh is witnessing a troubling rise in child labour, with the latest government survey showing that about 9.2 percent of children aged 5-17 are engaged in work, up from 6.8 percent in 2019.

The Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS) 2025, launched on Sunday, highlights stark disparities in child labour across gender, age, education, and region.

The survey shows hazardous work also remains widespread, with 9 percent of children exposed to dangerous conditions such as extreme heat, harmful dust, chemicals, heavy loads, or unsafe tools and machinery.

Boys remain more involved in economic work, while girls shoulder a heavier share of unpaid domestic labour.

Meanwhile, children not attending school are around 2.6 times more likely to be in labour, with an 18 percent prevalence compared to 7 percent among those attending school, said the survey.

Experts say this underscores that keeping children in school remains the most effective protection against exploitation.

Poverty and location also play a decisive role. Children from the poorest households (14 percent) are nearly five times more likely to be in labour than their wealthier peers (3 percent), while rural children (10 percent) face higher risks than urban ones (7 percent).

Regionally, the northern divisions of Rajshahi (12.4 percent) and Rangpur (11.8 percent) remain the hardest hit.

In contrast, Dhaka (7.3 percent), Chattogram (7.9
