Woman's death sparks murder allegation

She said the family rushed from Lalbagh to Barsha's Monipuripara home, where they learned that she had been taken to the hospital. "We did not know then that they had killed my sister."

Shawon, Nabid's cousin, said he and his elder brother helped carry Barsha to an ambulance after Nabid called them around 12:45am.

He claimed Barsha had not eaten for two days following a dispute over a family birthday celebration. The couple had a physical altercation on Tuesday night, he said. Barsha later locked herself in a room, and Nabid broke down the door and found her dead, Shawon added.

Megh disputed his account, alleging that Barsha had been prevented from attending the celebration and eating.

According to the inquest report, it is initially suspected that Barsha had died from strangulation. It noted a crescent-shaped mark on Barsha's neck, swelling around both eyes, a cut above her right eye and dark marks on two fingers.

Tejgaon police OC Muniruzzaman said Barsha's father had filed a case and police were investigating all aspects. Bangladesh Mohila Parishad condemned the death and demanded an impartial investigation and exemplary punishment for those responsible.

Plastic monster statue raises pollution awareness

MOKAMMEL SHUVO

A 50-foot-tall monster sculpture made from plastic waste has been installed on Cox's Bazar beach to raise awareness of plastic pollution, drawing visitors who stop to look at it and ponder its environmental impact.

Set up between Sugandha and Seagull points by Bidyanondo Foundation in collaboration with the Cox's Bazar district administration, the installation was opened to visitors on October 12 by Deputy Commissioner MA Mannan.

Standing before the giant monster near Sugandha Beach, tourist Aminur Rahman from Lalbagh, Dhaka, was explaining the dangers of plastic pollution to his nine-year-old daughter, Sumaiya Akter.

Like Aminur and his daughter, many visitors have been gathering around the sculpture to take photographs and learn about the harmful effects of plastic waste.

Saiful Islam, a tourist from Natore, said he had visited Cox's Bazar two years ago but had not seen as much polythene, plastic cups and bottles scattered across the beach as he did during his latest visit.

He warned that the growing number of tourists and the resulting increase in waste could lead to a serious environmental crisis in the coming years.

Mohammad Rana, a member of Bidyanondo Foundation, said the monster is holding an uprooted coconut tree to symbolise the damage plastic pollution causes to biodiversity.

A special theatre has also been set up beside the sculpture to screen films promoting responsible tourism. Visitors must bring two discarded plastic bottles to enter and watch the films.

The initiative aims to combine entertainment with a message about collecting and recycling plastic waste.

Jamal Uddin, director of Bidyanondo Foundation, said people often enjoyed the sea's beauty without considering their own contribution to its pollution.

Organisers said the sculpture was made from five tonnes of plastic waste collected from the sea and surrounding areas.

Artists from the Faculty of Fine Arts at the University of Dhaka spent 20 days creating the installation using plastic waste collected from the beaches of Inani, Teknaf and Saint Martin's Island.
